ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF MYSORE.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR ENDING 30TH JUNE 1918.

PART I.—WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Establishment.

In Government Order No. G. 17305-6—G. M. 177-17-16, dated the 13th June 1918, permission was accorded to Dr. A. Venkatasubbaia, M.A., Assistant to the Director of Archæological Researches in Mysore, to resign the State service at the end of his period of probation.

2. In their Order No. G. 2839-42—G. M. 199-17-4, dated the 30th August 1917, Government transferred the work of the revision of the Mysore Gazetteer to the Revenue Secretary on special duty. The Gazetteer establishment attached to this office reported itself for duty to the above-mentioned officer in November 1917.

3. In Government Order No. G. 6890-906—G. M. 401-16-22, dated the 24th November 1917, Mr. R. Rama Rao, B.A., Assistant Master, Government Collegiate High School, Bangalore, was appointed as Probationer in the Archæological Department. He joined the office on the 2nd January 1918.

4. In their Order No. G. 7848-9—G. M. 320-17-4, dated the 8th November 1917, Government sanctioned the continuance of the temporary establishment for the Archæological Office for a further period of one year from the 8th December 1917.

5. The term of appointment of two additional Pandits was extended for a further period of two years from the 1st July 1918 by Government Order No. G. 14547-8—G. M. 579-17-2, dated the 29th April 1918.

6. In Government Order No. G. 5875-6—G. M. 320-17-3, dated the 21st October 1917, sanction was accorded to the extension of the services of Pandit A. Anandalvar for a further period of one year from the 28th December 1917.

7. Dr. A. Venkatasubbaia had privilege leave for nearly 2½ months. M. V. Srirangachar had leave without allowances for 12 months and K. V. Subrahmanyam for 21 days. M. C. Srinivasa Iyengar had privilege leave for 23 days and medical leave for 27 days. Pandit Anandalvar had privilege leave for 1 month and 9 days; N. Nanjunda Sastri for 1 month; Bommarasa Pandit for 25 days; H. Sesha Iyengar for 22 days; Gurusami Achari for 20 days; and Pandit Venkannachar and A. Srinivasarangachar for 15 days each.

Tours: Exploration, Inspection of Temples, etc.

8. In February, March and June 1918 tours were made in the Tumkur, Chitaldrug, Mysore and Hassan Districts with the object of making a resurvey of portions of these districts and of inspecting some temples of archæological interest. It is pleasing to note that the resurvey has brought to light nearly 300 new records, some of which appear to be of considerable historical value, and a number of artistic structures which had not been noticed before. I left Bangalore for Tumkur on the 14th February 1918.

9. In the Tumkûr District I toured through all the taluks except Gubbi and Kunigal. A brief account will now be given of the discoveries made, as also of anything noteworthy with regard to the villages surveyed. The Lakshmikânta temple at Tumkûr, which faces east, is a Dravidian structure consisting of a garbhagriha or adytum, a sukhanûsi or vestibule, a navaranga or central hall, a mukha-manṭapa or front hall and a prakāra or enclosure. The navaranga has a second entrance on the north. The god

Lakshmikānta is a seated figure, about 4½ feet high, with the goddess seated on his left thigh. The temple appears to be older than 1560, as evidenced by an inscription on the wall to the right of the navaranga entrance (E C, XII, Tumkūr 4), which records a grant to it in that year by Jagannāthadēva-mahā-arasu, a subordinate of the Vijayanagar king Sadāśiva-Rāya. The pillar bearing the inscription Tumkūr 3, which was at the Basava temple, has been removed and set up opposite the vegetable market.

10. The Rāmēdēvaru temple at Maralūr has for the object of worship a good stone panel, measuring 2' by 1½', sculptured with a horseman holding a spear in the uplifted right hand. In front of the horseman stand five female figures, representing perhaps his wives, and behind him two male figures, probably his servants. The semi-circular top of the panel is artistically executed with scroll work.

The Chennakēśava temple at Kaidāla is a large Dravidian building with a mahādvāra or outer gate surmounted by a gōpura or tower. The god, about 5 feet high with prabhā or glory, faces west and stands on a pedestal, about 3 feet high, flanked by consorts. The navaranga has two entrances on the north and south, the former facing the mahādvāra. The outer walls of the mahādvāra, which is supported by four well executed pillars with lions and riders, are carved with rows of elephants, horses and gālis. On a pillar to the right in the mahādvāra is a figure of Chennakēśava, similar to the one inside the temple, with consorts on the side panels. The pillar opposite to it has a fine figure, about 1½ feet high, standing with folded hands wearing an uttariyam or upper cloth and a dagger, which is said to represent the celebrated sculptor Jakanāchāri who, according to tradition, was a native of this village and had his right hand, which he had cut off owing to the defect pointed out to him by his son in his handiwork the image of Kappē-Chennigarāya at Belur, restored to him after completing this temple. It is also stated that the village got the name Kai-āla, "the restored hand", from this incident. But this tradition does not appear to be worthy of credence. The existence of a sculptor named Jakanāchāri, who is supposed to have built all the artistic structures in Mysore and elsewhere, is itself doubtful, seeing that no such name has been met with in any of the ornate buildings so far examined, though the names of numerous other sculptors have been noticed. Further, the expression Kaidāla does not by any means convey the sense of "a restored hand" in Kannada, though both the words kai and tala mean "a hand." Again, the name of the village being Kaidāla with a long a, the supposed meaning of Kaidāla, even if correct, cannot be attached to it. It is very likely that the figure on the pillar, referred to above, represents a chief who caused the temple or the mahādvāra to be erected. The Gangādhārēśvara temple, situated to the east of the Chennakēśava, also appears to be a Dravidian structure, though the navaranga has four beautifully sculptured black stone pillars decorated with bead work like the ones found in Hoysala buildings, supporting a ceiling, about 1½ feet deep, carved with a lotus. The pillars are sculptured on the bottom panels on all the four sides with fine figures such as Śiva, Brahma, Viṣṇu, Bhairava, Kṛiṣṇa, Gaṇapati, Virabhadra and so forth. In the navaranga is the inscription Tumkūr 9, engraved on two slabs, one having a linga at the top and the other a standing figure of Viṣṇu with a figure of Jina under a mukhoḍe or triple umbrella seated to its right, which tells us that the temple was built in 1151 by Sāmanta-Bāchi, a subordinate of the Hoysala king Nārasiṃha I, in memory of his father Sāmanta-Gangayya. We also learn that Bāchi built besides Viṣṇu and Jina temples at the village and endowed them. The Viṣṇu temple is no doubt the Chennakēśava noticed above and the figure on the pillar of its mahādvāra probably represents Bāchi. The inscription thus bears testimony to the cosmopolitanism of Sāmanta-Bāchi. A new epigraph was copied at the village.

11. Dēvarāyadurga is a fortified hill situated in the midst of picturesque scenery. It consists of three elevations and has 7 gates. On the lowest elevation are situated the village Malapattana and the Lakṣmīnārasiṃha temple. The latter is a Dravidian structure facing east. From the inscriptions Tumkūr 41 and 42 we learn that the enclosure and tower were repaired in 1858 by the Mysore king Kṛiṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III. An annual jātre or great festival takes place in the month of Chaitra (April) at which thousands of people collect together, and there are many cells and mantapas built for accommodating them. The temple has large vessels presented by the śrāmis of the Vyāsarāya and Kundūr maṭhas. There is also another temple, said to be older than the Lakshminarasimha, dedicated to Hanumān, also known as Sanjīvarāya, who stands with folded hands. On the wall of what is known as the Penugonda Gate is sculptured a figure holding a vīṇā or lute in the right hand with a label (Tunkūr 40) in characters of about the 15th century stating that the figure represents the musician Virupanna, son of Sukumāradēva. Near Ane-done or the Elephant spring are seen the remains of the tomb of an elephant, said to have been built by a former chief. The place was originally known as Ānebiddasari or "the Precipice where the elephant fell", then as Jāḍakanadurga after a chief named Jāḍaka, and finally as Dēvarāyadurga after its capture by the Mysore king Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar. On the slope of the hill is a pond which is said to be the source of the stream Mangali. Higher up is a small spring named Jaya-tīrtha which represents the source of another stream Jaya. Both the streams unite at Irukasandra at the foot of the hill and form the Jayamangali. A small shrine in the jungle has a seated figure, about 1 foot high, of Rāmānujāchārya, locally known as Kannappadēvaru or Kaṭṭemanedēvaru, which is the tutelary deity of the Nāyakamakkalu or hunters. On the intermediate elevation are situated the Government Travellers' Bungalow and another bungalow owned by the missionaries. Here are a well and two doyes or springs, the latter known as Rāma-tīrtha and Dhanus-tīrtha. Near at hand is a large cave with figures of Rāma, Sītā and Lakshmana. There are also remains of dwelling houses and offices which once stood here. On the third elevation stands, facing east, a temple of Lakshminarasimha, known as the Kumbhi (summit) Narasimha temple, which consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a navaranga, a mukha-mantapa and a porch and is similar in plan to the temple below. To the left in the navaranga are kept stone figures of almost all the Śrīvaishṇava saints (ālvārs) and sages (āchāryas). In the prakāra or enclosure is the shrine of the goddess as in the lower temple, which also contains a fine, but mutilated, figure of another goddess known as Maḍapalli-Nāchchiyār (or the Kitchen goddess). In the kitchens of Viṣṇu temples it is usual to keep a figure of Lakshmi known under this name. Near the temple is a large doye to the south of which is a narrow cave with a flight of steps leading to a reservoir at the bottom known as Pāda-tīrtha, which is said to issue from the foot of the god. Higher up above the temple is a small shrine of Garuḍa near which is a big boulder known as Divige-guṇḍu (or the lamp boulder) on which an iron lamp with a long shaft is fixed. This lamp, lighted occasionally by devotees in fulfilment of vows, is said to be visible to Bangalore and other distant places. It appears that some years ago the figure of Garuḍa was mutilated by some Christian boys who were punished for their vandalism. In the rampart on the hill a hole is pointed out as having been caused by a gun-shot from the opposite hill known as Parangi-betṭa. In the sthala-purāṇa the hill is named Karigiri (or the elephant mountain) and is said to present the appearance of an elephant, a snake, a lion and Garuḍa when viewed from the four directions. A new inscription was found at the temple.

At some distance from Dēvarāyadurga is situated by the side of the Tunkur road the Forest Lodge near which is a tiny spring of pellucid water known as Nāmada-tīrtha which issues from the living rock and fills and overflows a mortar cut in the rock. Tradition has it that the spring was brought into existence by the god Narasimha when he scratched the ground with his nail for procuring nāman (white earth with which Vaishṇavas mark their forehead). It appears that sometime back with the object of increasing the supply of water the rock was blasted, whereupon the flow instantly ceased to the great consternation of the inhabitants of the surrounding parts, and that after the performance of special worship and services in the Narasimha temple water again issued from the rock.

12. The Koratigere hill was once fortified, the remains of the fort wall being visible here and there. At about the middle portion of the hill is situated the Gangādhareśvara temple consisting of three cells standing in a line with a hall in front. The cells enshrine Gangādhareśvara, Pārvatī, and Śrinivāsa flanked by consorts. In front of the Śrinivāsa cell at some distance are kept on a raised platform figures of the Nara- grahas (or nine planets) in three rows with the sun in the centre facing east, while the others face all directions. Near the temple is a large done or spring, and a structure newly built for the accommodation of visitors. The summit has a shrine of Basava, to which the ascent is rather steep. A spot near one of the gates is pointed out as the Tankasile or mint of one of the former chiefs. It appears that once gold coins used to be picked up here. Government have now prevented the removal of earth from the place. Some boulders behind the hill known as Daḷavāyi-guṇḍu are said to represent the heads of a Daḷavāyi or general and his followers who turned traitors to a Pālegār princess named Bayyamma. A pond near the Gôkulada-Ānjanēya temple in the town, known as Bayyamma's pond, is said to have been built by this princess. Near this temple are also to be found a few good māstikals (or memorials of satis). While at Koratigere, I examined a few sanads and manuscripts in the possession of a goldsmith named Nāgalingāchāri. One of the sanads with him is printed as Tunkûr 31. Another has now been transcribed. Of the works contained in the manuscripts, two bear on architecture and the sinking of wells and one on medicine. There is also a Telugu commentary on Jayadēva's Gitagôvinda. When I was at Koratigere (in February) a jātre on a grand scale was going on in honor of Ānjanēya at Kēmēnhalli, about 4 miles from the town.

13. Agrahāra has a small Virabhadra temple and some linga-mudre stones without inscriptions. The latter are boundary stones marked with a linga to indicate that the land bounded by them was granted to a Śiva temple or a Śaiva institution. Similarly, stones marked with a discus indicate a grant to a Viṣṇu temple, while those marked with a mukkode or triple umbrella, a grant to a Jaina temple. The aromatic water-plant baje (Acorus calamus) is largely cultivated in this village, more than 50 acres of land being under this crop. The yield per acre is said to be from 150 to 250 maunds. The root sells at about Rs. 2-8 per maund and is exported to Bangalore and other places. While at this village, I examined the library of

Patel Isvarayya, containing nearly one hundred palm-leaf manuscripts, and found in them several unpublished Kannada and Sanskrit works bearing mostly on the Viraśaiva religion and hagiology. There were also a few Kannada and Telugu poems, works treating of medicine and Kannada commentaries on Sanskrit works. The temple of Mallappa to the north of Nāgēnhalli, known as Guṭṭe-Mallappa, is situated in a cave. To the west of it stands in the open a slab, measuring 9' × 6' × 1', carved with a fine figure of Hanumān called Bail-Hanumanta. Two small monkeys at the sides are represented as eagerly eating some fruit. To the north of Navilkuriki is a fine māstikal containing figures of husband and wife standing side by side, the latter holding a mirror in the left hand and a line between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand. In some cases flames are shown as issuing from the head of the female figure, and the couple are represented as dancing as an indication of their joy after coming together in heaven.

Hanchihalli. Hanchihalli has a ruined fort, as also the hill near it known as Ūrugutṭe. At some distance to the north of the village is a māstikal of another type, showing an arm and hand projecting from an upright post, with figures of the couple sculptured below. The villagers believe that the stone represents Vyāsana-tôḷu (or Vyāsa's arm). When only one hand projects from the post, the stone is known as Okkai-māsti; when two hands project, it is known as Ikkai-māsti, the number of hands representing the number of wives who became satis. A new epigraph was discovered at the village. A well executed māstikal was also found in Nanjappa's backyard at Hālikuṇṭe. It had been walled up, leaving just the linga at the top visible. After dismantling the wall, the slab was found to consist of three panels. The top panel has between the sun and moon two rearing cobras with a male figure standing to the left bearing a mace in the right hand and lifting up something with the left. The middle panel has a linga in the centre flanked on both sides by couples with folded hands, one of the male figures being armed with bow and arrow and the female figure of the couple to the right showing flames issuing from the head. The bottom panel has in the centre a standing couple with an intervening sword, the female figure holding a mirror in the left hand and a line between the thumb and forefinger of the right hand. On both sides of the couple is a female figure on horse-back holding a mirror and a line. This is very peculiar : the women too seem to have taken part in fight. Both must have become satis. A new inscription was found on the slab. The hill known as Mukundarangana-gudda has on the top a small temple adorned with a gōpura or tower, the object of worship being a round stone in the shape of a linga (lingākāra). An old ciragal of the Ganga period was found at Buruganhalli.

14. The Venkaṭaramana temple at Rāmpura is a large Dravidian structure with a gōpura and prākāra which present some features of the Saracenic style. It is said to have been renovated during Hyder's time. To the left of the outer entrance is sculptured a standing male figure, about 1½ feet high, wearing a cloak and leaning on a staff, resembling the Kempe-Gauḍa figures noticed at Māgaḍi (Report for 1915, para 8) and other places. The god is known as Kari-Timnappa. There is likewise a figure of Paravāsudēva kept in the nararaṅga, as also figures of Vishvaksēna, Rāmānujāchārya and Nammālvār. Three new records were copied at the temple. The pedestal of Anantanātha in the Anantanātha-basti at the village bears an inscription of three lines. As we are not allowed to go in, I gave special instructions to the pūjāri to prepare an impression ; but the impression was not satisfactory, only a few words of the first line being legible in it. The basti does not appear to be an old one. A new inscription was discovered at Mallekāvu. Close to the village flows a small stream known as Siddhara-bettada-haḷḷa (the stream of the Siddhas' hill). This hill, about three miles to the west of the village, is largely visited by pilgrims from the surrounding parts, especially on Tuesdays and Fridays. It has a cave temple enshrining a linga at the foot of which is a perennial spring in the form of a well, one yard square and four feet deep, which is said to be the source of the above-mentioned stream.

Chennarāyadurga.

Chennarāyadurga is a fine mass of rock beautifully fortified by the Maddagiri chief Chennappa-Gauḍa about the middle of the 17th century. It has two elevations. On the lower are situated the Chennigarāya and Īśvara temples, as also a fine semi-circular done with clear water. There are besides granaries and powder magazines. There are several gates leading to the higher elevation, which is also fortified with brick walls raised over stone walls. The ascent is very steep and there is no flight of steps. The village at the foot of the hill has also a few temples. A fine cave temple, rather large and neatly kept, is known as the maṭha of Murāri-svāmi, who is said to have been a great ascetic and is believed to have gone to heaven with his body. The object of worship here is a pair of sandals. The cave has also some yōga-maṭṭpas and cells. A saṁādhi or tomb near the cave is said to be that of Vaikunṭhappa, a disciple of Murāri. There is also lower down another saṁādhi, said to be of Annapūrnammā, a female disciple of Murāri, who was so named by her guru because she fed a large number of people with half a seer of rice. An inscription at Tumbāḍi (Maddagiri 27) gives the name of the village as Tumbevāḍi. It is evidently identical with Tumbepāḍi mentioned in Bangalore 83, of about A.D. 900, as the place where by order of the Ganga king Ereyappa Nāgattara fought with the Nolambas and fell.

roofed and converted into Government offices. The Mallēśvara and Venkaṭaramana temples, which are similar in plan and stand in a line facing east, are large Dravidian structures with lofty towers. The lamp-pillar in front of the Mallēśvara temple, about 20 feet high, has a pavilion on the top for placing lamps. The porch of the temple has two niches, the one to the left containing a figure of Harihara and the other, a figure of Gaṇapati. In the prākāra are shrines of Pārvati, Mahishāsura-mardini, Subrahmanya, Tāṇḍavēśvara and Krishna, the last a fine figure, and rows of linga cells on the north and south. On the pedestal of Pārvati is a label giving the names of two women who may have set up the image. In this shrine is also kept the metallic figure of Chaudēśvari, whose temple has gone to ruin. This is a seated figure, about 1½ feet high, with 8 hands, 5 of them bearing a bell, a shield, a cup, an axe and a sword, one holding the head of a demon, the remaining two being in the fear-removing (abhaya) and dancing (nāṭya) attitudes. The kalyāṇa-maṇṭapa is a good structure supported by 4 pillars, the front portions of which are carved into figures of Nārada, Tumburu and two other ṛishis or sages. A new epigraph was found at the temple. In the Venkaṭaramaṇa temple the god is about 6 feet high and there are two goddesses named Śrīdēvi and Bhūdēvi in separate shrines in the prakāra. The porch has two cells, the one to the right enshrining Garuḍa and the other, Hanumān. The temple has also stone and metallic figures of several Śrīvaiṣṇava saints and sages. The Mallinātha-basti adjoining the fort wall has in front a good mānastambha, about 15 feet high, with a pavilion on the top but without the usual Jina figure. Besides Jina figures, the basti has two seated stone figures of Brahma and metallic figures of Sarasvati and Padmāvatī. A new inscription was discovered here and another at the Kālamma temple. The lofty west gate of the town, about 20 feet high, is known as Daṇḍūru-bāgilu. There are several fine wells at Maddagiri such as Jānaiyana-bāvi, Arasana-bāvi, Pradhānara-bāvi, etc., stepped all round and adorned with sculptures here and there. Of these, the first situated to the north of the Travellers' Bungalow is perhaps the best. It has a beautiful gateway and well carved figures of Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Sītā, and Hanumān trampling on a demon. The second well, situated to the east of the Travellers' Bungalow, has figures of Hanumān, Gaṇapati and Bhairava, as also an inscription (E C, XII, Maddagiri 16) which tells us that it was built in 1699 by order of the Mysore king Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar and named Dēvarāya-saṃudra after him. From another inscription (Maddagiri 15) on a rock at some distance to the south of the Travellers' Bungalow, we learn that the same king built in 1690 a maṇṭapa, a brīndāvana and a pond known as Gōpālasarassu, and that Gauramma of Talakāḍu, his queen, built a pond. The brīndāvana is a good structure with a canopy; but it is not known why it was built. Close to it stand 4 beautifully carved pillars, about 12 feet high, decorated with scroll work on all the sides. These are said to have once belonged to the sluice of a tank which is no longer in existence. At some distance to the town is a Lingāyat maṭha known as Gurrammana-maṭha, close to which is a gaddige or tomb of a Lingāyat guru named Śivalingasvāmī. To the south-east of the maṭha are some caves at the foot of Maddagiridurga, named Sādhu-gavi, Mēke-gavi, Paṭṭaladammana-gavi and Siddhēśvara-gavi. An inscription was found at the third cave, which records a grant by the wife of the Maddagiri chief Chikkappa-Gauḍa.

16. The Maddagiri hill is one mass of rock strongly fortified. It has several Maddagiridurga. dones or springs, such as Navilādi-done on the north slope, Bhīmana-done on the south slope, Ittige-done on the hill, Chandra-done higher up, and Navil-done on the top. Several of these are stepped with bricks. Above Chandra-done the ascent is very steep for some distance. It is said that the palace of the Pālegār was situated near this dōne. There are several gates leading to the top, such as the Antarālada-bāgilu, Diddi-bāgilu, etc. The Mysore gate is to the south. On the top is situated the Gōpālākṛiṣṇa temple, which is now empty. Near it are the granary of rāgi and the treasury. Grains of rāgi are even now available for examination. The treasury appears to have had rows of big pots buried up to the neck close to the walls. There are likewise dome-like masonry structures with circular openings at the top for storing ghee and oil. Similar structures are also found lower down. They are called kaṇajas in Kannaḍa. The view from the top defies description; any number of hills and tanks meet our gaze on every side, the hills looking like little mounds and the tanks like small pools of water. A risky descent of some distance on the almost perpendicular south slope of the hill takes us to Bhīmana-done. Here is a fine figure of Hanumān with an inscription to its left telling us that the figure was consecrated and the dōne made by the Maddagiri chief Mummaḍi Chikkappa-Gauḍa in 1646. He is identified in inscriptions and literature with Bijjavara, a village about 3 miles to the east of Maddagiri, which was apparently his capital. A descendant of his is now living in poor circumstances at Saṃbuvanhalli, about 4 miles from Maddagiri. At some distance above the foot of the hill is a square basin with a small hole on blowing into which a sound as of moving water is heard. This is probably a secret arrangement for the water-supply of the fortress. A stroke of lightning has split the mass of rock to a considerable distance causing a narrow crack all through. It has also thrown down the brick parapet in some places.

While I was at Maddagiri, Kâji Muhammad Imam, the caretaker of the Travellers' Bungalow, and his brother Kâji Muhammad Jamaluddin produced a bundle of papers consisting of sanads and letters dated from 1786 to 1890. Most of them relate to the office of Kâji held by the family for more than a century. Five sanads, 3 issued by Tippu and 2 by Divan Purnaiya, were selected and taken for examination. Dodda Rangegauda, the Patel of Maddagiri, and his brother Putta Rangegauda likewise produced some sanads which were also taken for examination. According to these records the Patel seems to be a lineal descendant of one of the minor local chiefs.

17. Siddâpura, about a mile to the north-west of Maddagiri, has a fort which, according to an inscription at the village (Maddagiri 21), was built in 1593 by the mahâ-nâdu-prabhu Chikkappa Gauda of Bijjavara (see para 15) during the reign of the Vijayanagar king Venkatapati-Râya I. The village has a well built Lingâyat maṭha known as Bâlarâdhyara-maṭha. Bâlarâdhyâ was probably the guru of Chikkappa-Gauda. Kuḍuvatti, situated at the foot of a hill of the same name, is a bêchirâkh or uninhabited village enclosed by a lofty mud wall. No person now enters the enclosure lest he should lose his life; because sometime back some one who dug the site for money vomited blood and died instantly. Close to the village are three temples known as the Gôpâlakrishna, the Lakshmidêvi and the Kambadarâya, and five old viragals without any writing. The objects of worship in the Kambadarâya temple are two pillars standing side by side. The porch has on the right wall sculptures representing the coronation of Râma and on the left Ranganâtha attended by Tumburu and Nârada. The sculptures on the pillars supporting the porch show some ingenious combinations of female figures and yâlis. Near the Gôpâlakrishna temple is a small pond, known as Majjanada-bâvi, on the door-post of which is carved a standing female figure, about 1½ feet high, said to represent one Jirale-Mallamma who built the Gôpâlakrishna and Lakshmidêvi temples, as well as this pond. Tradition says that she made a large sum of money by selling butter and that she utilised the money in carrying out these pious and useful works. The villagers make an offering of butter to the image and bathe it with three handfuls of water. An old inscription (Plate XIII, 2), probably of the period of the Nolamba king Ponnêra (close of the 8th century) was discovered at Srâvaṇḍanahalli. The engraver's name is given as Dhanapati-âchâri. An uninscribed viragal by the side of this epigraph has a prostrate figure lying at the bottom with the left hand severed, the cut off hand being placed at the side. The meaning of this is not clear. At Hampasamudra, about 2 miles to the east, a new inscription was copied, as also one at Tingalûru. The god in the Ânjanêya temple at Hale-Itakalôṭi is a good figure with a small monkey shown to the left as eating something. To the left of the temple is a stone sculptured with a female figure seated with the right hand seizing on what looks like a pole fastened with ropes. The figure is said to represent Dombara-Chinni (or Chinni of the sect of Dombas or tumblers who fell from the pole and died. It appears that even now when Dombas visit the village, they do not as usual fix a pole but perform on the ground after praying to the image. A new record was copied here. The Lakshminarasimha temple of Dodda-Dâlivatṭa is one of the largest Dravidian structures with an extensive prâkâra, measuring 125 yards by 70 yards, and a lofty mahâdvâra surmounted by a gôpura. To the right in the prâkâra is a satra or choultry for accommodating and feeding pilgrims during the car-festival which takes place on a grand scale in the month of Âshâḍha (July). Bullock carts can go inside the mahâdvâra and stand in the enclosure. There is a fine pond near the outer gate. The god, said to be udbhava-mûrti, is a small round stone standing a few inches above the ground level and adorned with a crown. The metallic figure of the god, about 1½ feet high, is Lakshminarasimha, which bears on the pedestal a label giving its name. There is a separate shrine of the goddess standing in a line with that of the god. A new inscription in Nâgari characters was found at the temple, as also a few modern ones on the temple bells and vehicles. In the open navaranga of the Îsvara temple to the north, is kept a well carved Gajalakshmi panel, which evidently belongs to some other temple. A new epigraph, also in Nâgari, was discovered here. While at the village, I also examined a few palm leaf manuscripts in the possession of Nanjunda Sastri. They were found to contain works bearing chiefly on medicine, astrology, mantra-śāstra and ritual. A new record was copied at a place known as Ēlusuttinakōṭe (a fort of seven enclosures) near Ītakadibbanahalli. According to tradition the Pāṇḍavas lived here for some time in a fort of seven walls built by them, and the inscription names them along with Abhimanyu. Śravaṇagūḍi has a number of old viragals (Maddagiri 92-101) standing near one another. At some distance from them is an uninscribed viragal, which is worthy of notice. It has in the upper portion a hero in the arms of celestial nymphs, while in the lower portion is seen a tiger pouncing on a bull. Probably the man fell fighting with the tiger.

18. Miḍigēśi is said to have been so named by a local chief, Nāgareḍḍi, after his wife Miḍigēśi, who was so called because her hair (kēśa) was so long that it touched her heel (mūḷi). The Venkaṭaramana temple which is similar in plan to the temple of the same name at Maddagiri (para 14), is said to have been built by the chief Nāgareḍḍi. His palace was situated to the south of the temple, and an entrance in the south wall of the prākāra, now closed, is said to have been the gate through which the palace people went into the temple. A figure on this wall, about 1½ feet high, standing with folded hands, is said to represent Nāgareḍḍi. There is also sculptured on the same wall a five-hooded snake, about 5 feet long, lying horizontally with a small figure of Krishna dancing on it. In the Garuḍa shrine in front of the temple is a square hole through which the rays of the rising sun are said to fall on the feet of the god. The navaranga entrance has at the sides two niches containing figures of Gaṇapati and Vīrabhadra. The Garuḍagamba is a fine pillar, about 40 feet high, decorated with scroll work on all the sides; but unfortunately it has been broken in the middle by a stroke of lightning, the upper portion lying below. The Mallēśvara temple is said to have been built by Okkaligas of the Śeṭṭenōru sect, the god being their tutelary deity. Tradition has it that a beautiful damsel of this sect, named Chikka-Mallamma, was during an attack by the Muhammadans seized by them and confined in the fortress on the Miḍigēśi hill; and that on her prayer to God for her release, the rock split and made way for her, whereupon she descended the hill and entered fire in front of the god Mallēśvara. Her figure, about 2 feet high, is sculptured on the rock to the right of the flight of steps leading to the top about the middle of the hill. It is in a walking posture holding a sword in the right hand and what looks like a lance in the left. The Okkaligas referred to above were of three classes: Śeṭṭenōru, Alpenōru and Gōṇōru. A copper plate inscription in the possession of the pūjāri of the Mallēśvara temple, of which only the last plate was shown to me, mentions these classes of Okkaligas and refers to the agni-pravēśa (entering fire) of the damsel. The god in the Jībi-Ānjanēya temple is a huge figure, about 9 feet high. The Miḍigēśi hill is said to have been fortified by Nāgareḍḍi mentioned above.

Here also we have the usual granaries of rāgi and paddy, dome-like structures for storing ghee and oil, powder magazines and doneś. Grains of old rāgi can even now be had for examination, but the paddy-kauaja has only a quantity of husk. Two of the doneś are named Musare-done and Kannērammuna-done, the former situated on the top and the latter on the north slope. There is a fine mosque on the summit with two minarets at the sides and an ornamental parapet all round the roof. It has also flights of steps on both the sides. Close to the mosque stands a shrine dedicated to Hanumān. There are several gates leading to the top of the hill.

19. Both the town of Pāvugaḍa and the hill near it are beautifully fortified. The hill is not one mass of rock like those at Maddagiri and Miḍigēśi, but is made up in the higher portion of a number of gigantic boulders, some of them being nearly 100 feet high. There are 10 gates leading to the top. At some distance from the foot is the Kammāra-manṭapa; higher up, Beṭṭada (or the hill) Ānjanēya, a good figure, about 7 feet high, with a well carved uttariyam or upper cloth and a little monkey seated to the left eating something; further up, a circular done called Kōnēri and a manṭapa known as Kōnēri-manṭapa, near which stands a dome-like structure for storing ghee (tuppada- kanaja). Going further, we see a rock with some small holes which are believed to be the hoof marks of a horse which leapt from the top. Near by is a well, now closed, from which water is said to have been drawn to the top of a boulder, about 80 feet high. On the top is the Sultān-battēri (battery), occupying the highest point, and to its west, Subbarāya's battēri. Besides the one already mentioned, the hill has several more *done*s known as Akkammana-dōṇe, Bābaiyana-kere, Bhīmanadōṇe and so forth. The last is a fine reservoir with clear and deep water, situated between two huge boulders. We have to descend some 70 steps to reach the water. This dōṇe is said to be connected with another at the foot of the hill known as Kelagaṇa-dōṇe. A square slab containing a defaced Persian inscription, which was fitted into a cavity in the boulder to the right, is now kept in the Archæological Office. A spot is shown on the hill wherefrom undesirables were once hurled down to the bottom of the precipice. We have here also the usual granaries of rāgi and paddy and powder magazines. The summit has an incomplete mosque which is said to have been built with the materials of a Gōpālakrishna temple which once stood there. A Persian inscription was found here. There is a small shrine at the foot of the hill called the Gōpālakrishna in which the metallic image of the Gōpālakrishna temple used to be kept when that temple was on the hill. We have now a Gōpālakrishna temple in the town itself. From an inscription newly discovered on the hill we learn that the fortress was built in 1405 by Gōpaṇṇa, a general under the Vijayanagar king Dēva-Rāya I.

20. Two new inscriptions were found at Naligānhalli and one at Chiknāva-kanhalli. The top slab of the fine sluice of Doddakere

 Gundalhalli. stone fixed at the sides. On a rough boulder on the bund of the tank are engraved the inscriptions Pāvugaḍa 11-13. The date assigned to these records in the Tumkur volume, viz., c. 1530, is evidently a mistake, seeing that the characters are unquestionably of the 8th. century as evidenced by the square form of ba used in them. The cyclic year Jaya given in one of the records most probably corresponds to A. D. 754. The tank is named Akale-samudra after a lady Akaleti who built it. It is thus one of the oldest tanks in the State, though Panamankere at Tālgunda, Shikārpur Taluk, is older still by about two centuries. In the prākāra of the Īśvara temple on the bund of Chikkakere at the same village, stands a stone, about 9 feet high, with several curves in the form of a snake, and the villagers firmly believe that there is treasure below it. No such stone has been met with elsewhere. At the Rāmadēva shrine, which is a large cave containing some small stones daubed with white earth and red ochre, two new records were copied. The Ānjanēya temple has a very large figure, about 10 feet high, of the god. The Rangasvāmi temple at bēchirākh Rangāpura has a round stone (udbhava-mūrti) for the object of worship. In the prākāra are several small shrines containing figures with folded hands. In one of them is sculptured a couple seated with folded hands with an inscription on the side slab stating that the figures were consecrated by their son. Another slab just outside the prākāra, measuring 6 feet by 5 feet, represents Hanumān and Garuḍa as contesting the possession of a fruit which is split in the middle. There is a similar panel at Belur, but the object of dispute there is said to be a linga. Three new epigraphs were discovered here. In the Kambadarāya shrine at Bhangāranāyakana-beṭṭa the Bēchirākh Rangāpura. object of worship is a pillar, about 13 feet high, marked with a discus and a conch on the sides. The pillar has an iron lamp fixed on the top which is occasionally lighted by the villagers. No ladder is to be used for this purpose. The villagers have to bathe and fast, and then, standing over the shoulders of one another without allowing their feet to come in contact with the pillar, they light the lamp. The hill near the village, which was once fortified, contains the ruins of several buildings. Near Rangasamudra was noticed a big Bhangāranāyakana-beṭṭa. heap of moras or winnows below a tree, and on enquiry
 Rangasamudra. we were told that these were the offerings of the village
 Goddess Morālamma. to the goddess Morālamma (the goddess of winnows) who was being carried from village to village, and that they had to be removed to the next village along with the goddess. The village has a small elegant shrine surmounted by a tower, which is called Mallēśvara's maṇṭapa, though there is nothing inside. A new inscription was copied at Rangasamudradapālya.

21. Niḍugal, once a prosperous city, is now a small unhealthy village containing about half a dozen houses. There is also a larger

Niḍugal. village of the same name on the first elevation of the adjacent Niḍugal hill. There are numerous temples both at the foot and on the hill, but most of them are in ruins. Of those at the foot, which seem to be comparatively modern, the Śāravādēśvara temple, also called the Hoṭṭēśvara after the Haratī chief Hoṭṭēṇṇa-Nāyaka, was built in 1681 (Pāvugaḍa 59). The god is named Śāravādēśvara after Śāravāḍ, a village in the Bijapur country, which is said to be the birthplace of the progenitor of the Haratī family. The Rāma temple has a boulder carved with the figures of Rāma, Sitā, Lakshmaṇa and Sugrīva, with Hanumān and Garuḍa at the sides. To the right of this composition on the same boulder is a big figure of Hanumān, and to the left a figure of Mahishāsuramardini. The Kāśīśvēśvara temple is a small neat structure with three cells in a line and a common navaranga. The central cell has a linga, the right cell Gaṇapati and the left Pārvati. The last is a seated figure, about 1½ feet high, holding a ladle horizontally with both the hands. Such a figure of Pārvati is known as Annapūrṇā. On the back wall of the Gaṇapati cell is carved a linga worshipped by an elephant on the right and by Vyāghrapāda on the left. To the left in the Āṇjanēya temple stands a rishi or sage bearing a rosary in the right hand which rests in the fear-removing (abhaya) pose on a staff, and holding what looks like a book in the left. The village has also a kabar or tomb, said to be of Mirza Husēni Vali who came from Hyderabad, in honor of which a jātre or urs is held every year. A new record was copied at the village. The Niḍugal hill has two or three distinct elevations. But the ascent is very steep and difficult,

Niḍugaldurga. there being no steps at all to help the climber. It takes nearly an hour and a half to reach the top, that is, without any stoppages on the way. But when once there, you forget all your fatigue and enjoy one of the grandest views of the surrounding landscape: you see any number of hills and lakes as far as the eyes can reach. The inscription Pāvugaḍa 52, of 1232, says that the hill was named Niḍugal (lofty rock) because it touched the skies with its formidable peak; and Pāvugaḍa 54, of 1487, tells us that it was the most impregnable of all the hill fortresses in the Karnāṭa country. It is also called Kālānjana in the inscriptions. There are several lines of fortifications known as Kālēśvara-kōṭe, Bhairavana-kōṭe, Are-kōṭe, Nagarēśvara-kōṭe, etc., and a number of gates known as Māṭa-nūru-bāgilu, Singārada-bāgilu, Simalayana-diḍḍi and so on. The hill has likewise the usual granaries, powder magazines, dozes, palace ruins, etc. On the top the chief Hoṭṭēṇṇa-Nāyaka built a small Basava shrine in 1653 (Pāvugaḍa 42) and had an inscription engraved. The shrine is now in ruins. A new inscription was discovered on the pillar in front of it. By the side of the shrine is an iron lamp with a shaft, about 6 feet high, fixed on the rock, which is lighted once a year or oftener by the people of the surrounding villages in fulfilment of their vows. A little lower down is the Kālāhastīśvara temple which, according to Pāvugaḍa 46, had its linga set up by Rāma, and was renovated by the Haratī chief Timmaṇṇa-Nāyaka in 1670. This seems to be one of the oldest temples on the hill. The people of the surrounding parts visit the temple on the Śivarātri day, stop there the whole night and go away the next morning after meals. At some distance are lying three pieces of old cannon, one of which, about 18 feet long, is known as Ēlu-makkaḷa-tāyi or "the mother of seven children." The palace has only a few walls now left. A portion scooped out at the top of a huge boulder with holes for steps is said to have served as a seat for the chief during darbārs. The palace garden has a pair of ornamental black stone pillars known as bāvikallu or "well stones" with holes for the cross bar, surmounted by figures of bulls and curved at the top. There is also a dark underground cell (nelumāḷige) attached to a boulder. The ruined Nāgēśvara temple near a pond known as Hokkraṇe is a Hoysala building which, according to Pāvugaḍa 53, of about 1150, was founded during the reign of the Chālukya king Jagadēkamalla II. The navaranga has 5 niches on both sides, as also figures of Subrahmaṇya and Sūrya, a beautifully carved but headless female figure and a fine Nāgakanyakā with a female figure at the side. The Nāgēśvara appears to be the oldest of the existing temples on the hill, though mention is made of a temple founded by Bidichōrarasa of the Pallava family in an inscription of the 8th century (Pāvugaḍa 45) built into the left wall of the porch of the Kālāhastīśvara temple. There is an underground canal supplying water to the Hokkraṇe mentioned above. The god of the Chennakēśava temple has been removed and set up in a new temple at the village Bellibattalu. Near this temple is a small shrine containing an elegantly carved seated figure, about 3 feet high, of Bhairava with 10 hands. There is also a buried Śiva temple here of good workmanship. The ruined Lakshmanēśvara temple at the Mātanūru gate was built in 1487 (Pāvugaḍa 54) by the Harati chief Chika-Tippa-Nāyaka in memory of his deceased wife Lakshminādēvi. Pāvugaḍa 54 also tells us that there were shrines of Durgā, Bhairava and Gaṇapati in each of the 8 directions on the hill. The above mentioned Bhairava shrine may be one of these. At the village on the first elevation is a temple of Durgā and a small shrine surmounted by a tower known as Rangadhāmana-maṇṭapa which is now empty. Two modern inscriptions on bells were copied at the Durgā temple. Two more "well stones", similar to those noticed in the palace garden, are also to be found near the village. At some distance from the village are the Virabhadra, Pārśva-nātha, Ādinārāyaṇa, Lakshminarasimha, Nagarēśvara, Male-Mallikārjuna and Sōmēśvara temples scattered in different directions. In the Virabhadra temple the god, about 5 feet high, is a two-armed figure holding a sword and a shield. The Pārśva-nātha-basti probably came into existence in 1232 according to Pāvugaḍa 52 in which it is named Jōgavaṭṭigeya-basadi. The god, about 5 feet high, faces east, while his Yakshi, Padmāvatī, a seated figure, about 2 feet high, is enshrined in a cell facing south. There is also a figure of Brahma on horseback, which was once over the pillar in front. Two inscriptions were found on the pedestals of images, as also two modern ones on a bell and a gong. Ādinārāyaṇa is a good figure, about 5 feet high. In the navaranga of the Lakshminarasimha temple are kept a figure of Sūrya and a panel depicting the coronation of Rāma. On both sides of the outer entrance are cells containing big figures of Hanumān. The Nagarēśvara temple has two cells enshrining lingas named Nagarēśvara and Gaurīśvara, and the navaranga has figures of Viṣṇu, Mahishāsuramardini and Saptamātrikāh together with a few well carved Nāgakanyakās. The inscriptions Pāvugaḍa 47-50, which are wrongly stated in the Tumkur volume to be in the Kālahastīśvara temple, are here. This temple goes back to 1248 (Pāvugaḍa 50). Two new viragals were found in the prākāra. The Sōmēśvara temple, probably founded in 1292 (Pāvugaḍa 53), seems to be the finest Dravidian structure on the hill. It has an elegantly carved navaranga doorway of black stone with jambs consisting of four fascias—the innermost adorned with scroll work, the next with figures in every convolution of the scroll, the third carved into an ornamental pilaster and the last sculptured with spirited lions and yālīs in all postures. The pediment has Tāṇḍvēśvara with attendant musicians, the lintel Gajalakṣmi and the bottom of the jambs dvārapālakas or doorkeepers and female figures holding a lotus and a kalāṣa or water vessel. The sukhanāsi doorway is also of black stone, but plain. The navaranga has besides Mahishāsuramardini two seated female figures, about 1½ feet high, one holding a child in the left hand and a fruit in the right, the other holding a fruit in the left hand and some indistinct object (? a short staff) in the right. It is not clear what these two figures are intended to represent. Two new inscriptions were discovered at this temple.

22. The Jumā Masjīd (Plate II, 1) and the Dargā of Malik Rihān (Plate II, 2) at Sira are fine structures of the Saracenic style. The Muhammadan buildings. former is said to have been built by Shaik Farid Sāheb, whose tomb together with that of his brother Shaik Kabir Sāheb, is pointed out in the enclosure of the mosque. The date of construction is indicated in the chronogram baitul mokaddas, A. H. 1108 (A. D. 1696). Two new Persian inscriptions were found here. The Dargā is a square building with a big dome with 4 black stone minarets, about 8 feet high, at the corners over the roof. Inside is the tomb of Malik Rihān, who was Subadār of Sira from 1637 to 1651. The Dargā seems to have been erected in 1651. Its plan is given on Plate III. Behind the building is an old mosque in which Malik Rihān is said to have prayed, and to the north-east a rectangular structure known as Diddi with 4 minarets on the roof, the front two taller than the hind ones, which he is said to have used as a study. To the south-east a tomb under a canopy is shown as that of a seven-year-old daughter of Aurangzeb. An inscription on it simply names Allah and Muhammad. Another new Persian inscription was found here, as also one on the outer wall of the outhouse attached to Chikka Masīdi or the little mosque. The Baraki mosque containing the inscription Sîra 71 is in a dilapidated condition. Near it is the tomb of Mahamûd Khân, a fine stone structure with minarets, battlements and an ornamental plinth. At some distance to the north is a Dargâ popularly known as Chinnadagôri owing to the dome having a gold kalasa or finial, containing the tomb of a Fakir named Farid-ullâ Shâh Husêni, who is said to have come from Bijâpur and performed severe penance here till ant-hills grew around him. He is held in great respect by all classes of Muhammadans, his makân being looked upon as a Chaukhañdi-maṭha. An annual urs takes place in his honor. The Dargâ is a small square stone building with a large dome and minarets. It was presented with the gold kalasa, it is said, by a Pālegâr of the place in fulfilment of a vow. Its custodian, Saiyad Kâssim, who is about 80 years old, said that he was the 7th in descent from Farid-ullâ and gave his pedigree thus:—Farid-ullâ, his disciple Mâsum Shâh, his disciple Mâguli Shâh, his disciple Lutpullâ Shâh, his disciple Yadullâ Shâh, his great grandson Saiyad Kâssim. According to him Fakirs are of 4 classes: Khâdri, Chishtyâ, Sarvardiyâ and Mujaddadiyâ. The first class may wear either dhôti or trousers; but the second only dhôti and they have to get clean-shaved. Saiyad Kâssim has in his possession a good number of sanads relating to the makân issued by Aurangzebe, Alamgir II, the Nizam, the Muhammadan Governors of Sîra, Hyder and the Mah-

Sanads. Of these, 4 in Kannada were transcribed—1 of Hyder, 1 of the Mahrâtas, 1 of Pradhân Venkappaia of Mysore and 1 of Navâb Lal Muhammad Khân. There was no time to examine the Persian and Mahrâthi sanads with him. The town is said to have once possessed 90 mosques, and it is studded all over with Muhammadan tombs.

23. The god of the Gôpâlakrishṇa temple has been removed to the newly built Nârâyana temple in the town and a good figure of Hanumân, brought from some other place, has been set up instead. A new epigraph was found here. The object of worship in the Durgâ temple is an ant-hill. In the maṇṭapa to the south of it was found a new inscription. There is also an inscription on a tomb situated in the compound of the Travellers' Bungalow, which tells us that a European lady named Ellen died of cholera in 1846 in Sîra. To the north of the town is said to be situated the site of an ancient city called Lâtapuri, that portion occupied by a few mean-looking houses being even now known as Lâtapuri-haṭṭi. Recently a broken cannon was unearthed in the quarter of the town known as Kumbâra-haṭṭi to the north of the fort. It is lying there even now. The fort is a fine stone structure with a moat all round. It once had two more enclosing mud walls also with, moats, traces of which exist. The inner fort is almost intact, but not inhabited though traces of former houses and offices are visible. There are two fine gates on the north with a side doorway in each case. A hall is attached to each, the first supported by 6 black stone pillars and the second by 4 sculptured granite pillars, though the sculptures are deliberately mutilated or chiselled out. The side doorway of the first gate is of carved black stone. There is a ruined mosque in the fort and a stepped well in which the wives of the Pālegâr are said to have drowned themselves when the fort was invested by the Muhammadans. To the south-west of the Travellers' Bungalow is a spacious cave divided into two compartments to the right and left. A new inscription was discovered at each of the villages Nâdûru, Kercyârahalli and Kallukôte and two at Halkûru. One of the latter has to be looked upon as a find of some historical importance, as it happens to be the only lithic record so far discovered of the Ganga king Śrîpurusha with a date in the Śaka era (Plate XIII, 1). This inscription is on a big pillar-like black stone which was immersed in water, and even with the help of a large number of men it took nearly three hours to get it out of water for examination. It is pleasing to note that the trouble taken had its reward.

24. From Sîra a visit was paid to Hiriyûr, Chitaldrug District, and a few villages in that taluk surveyed. The Têrumallêśvara temple at Hiriyûr is a large Dravidian structure with a mahâdvâra surmounted by a lofty gôpura. In front of it is a lofty uyyâle-kamba with stout iron chains hanging from the top intended for swinging the god. On the inner sides of the pillars are sculptured two male figures with folded hands armed with a sword and a shield. The open mukha-maṇṭapa or front hall has entrances in three directions. In front of it stands on a high pedestal a fine dîpa- stambha or lamp-pillar, about 45 feet high, with a pavilion at the top enshrining a Basava or bull, and 8 lamps in the form of huge iron cups, two in each direction, each capable of holding about 10 seers of oil. The lamps are lighted once a year. The pillar has slight projections on the sides which serve as steps to go to the top. Its front face has a male figure with folded hands, representing perhaps the chief who built the temple. The ceilings of the mukha-mantapa are painted with scenes from the Śaiva-purāṇas and the front central ceiling has a chain of stone rings. The east outer wall of the navaranga has two rows of figures representing the aṣṭa-dīkpalakas or regents of the directions and illustrating the story of the fight between Śiva as a kirāta or hunter and Arjuna. Though the gōpura faces east, the god faces south. In the navaranga are kept three sets of metallic figures—large images of Śiva and Pārvati, small images of the same, and Umāmahēśvara seated on Nandi—which are taken out in procession in three separate cars during the car festival which takes place in the month of Māgha (February). This circumstance probably accounts for the name Tēru(car)-mallēśvara. The ruined Virabhadra temple has figures of Virabhadra and his consort Bhadrakālī, the latter holding in the right lower hand a lotus instead of the usual sword, and Dakṣha's cut

Babbūra, author of Ambikāvijaya and Paraśurāma-Rāmāyaṇa, was a native of this town and a devotee of the god Ranganātha of Babbūru, a village about 2 miles from Hiriyūr. He mentions in his works the god Tērumallēśvara. Rangadāsappa, the present Shanbhog of Hiriyūr, who is about 65 years old, said that he was the great-grandson of Babbūra. It is not clear whether village has a horseman riding to right with a sword held in the uplifted right hand; behind him is a child standing with folded hands; and behind the child stands a female figure, perhaps the wife of the horseman, with uplifted right hand. It is not clear what the composition is intended to represent. The inscription merely names a number of gaṇḍas. Masakal was once fortified: two lofty gateways with wooden ceilings bear evidence to the importance

An ordeal. Abbinahole has a round stone (udbhava-mūrti) for the object of worship. In front of it was found a new inscription, dated 1664, which is of some interest as it refers to the establishment of a claim to the office of Shanbhog through success in an ordeal of dipping the hand in boiling ghee in the presence of a large number of people. Another discovery was a viragal of the time of the Nolamba king Ayyapa, dated 923. A few modern inscriptions were also found on the bells and gong of the Ranganātha temple. Bharmagiri, so named

Bharmagiri. after the Pālegār Bharmanna-Nāyaka, is situated on a fortified low hill. It has a shrine in which the utsava-vigraha or processional image of Kaṇiveya-Māramma, the goddess after whom Mārīkaṇive is named, is kept. The image consists of a wooden box which, decorated with hands and other limbs and an umbrella, is taken out in a car once a year. A modern inscription was copied here. The Mārīkaṇive dam, which may be looked Mārīkaṇive upon as a great feat of engineering skill, was commenced in August 1898 and completed in August 1907.

There are two fine mantapas in the Saracenic style built at the ends of the dam. The east mantapa has a tablet giving the dates of the commencement and completion of the dam. In the west mantapa is set up an inscription in Sanskrit and Kannāḍa verses composed by me, giving an account of the dam and of the progressive administration of Mysore, and the date Śaka 1828 (1907) in which the reservoir was opened for public use. Close to the reservoir is situated a shrine of Mārī known as Kaṇive Māramma, from whom the village derives its name. The shrine which was a wooden structure, has recently been built of dressed stone by one Kanuvappa of Mysore. It has a stone panel sculptured with three figures, Pârvati in the middle, Lakshmi to the right and Mâri to the left. To the right of the shrine, on a lower level, is a cell containing a broken vīraḡa which is known as Bhūtappa. As at Bharmagiri, there is a shrine at Arasinagunḡi dedicated to Mâri, here known as Kaṇuvamma, which contains the processional image in the shape of a box of the goddess at Mârikanive. In front of it is an iron lamp on a shaft about 8 feet high, which is lighted once a year. At some distance from the shrine stands in a field a mistikal carved with a fine female figure, about 2½ feet high, with its right hand raised and open and the left hand hanging by the side holding a lime, flames being shown around the head.

26. The Venkataramana temple at Chikkanâyakanhalli is the largest and finest of the Dravidian structures in the town. It stands on a raised terrace like Hoysala buildings and is enclosed by a large prakāra of which only the plinth is now left. The god, about 4 feet high, is a good figure, and behind it is an underground cell with a flight of steps. The pillars of the navaranga are sculptured on all sides, some of the sculptures being ingenious combinations of animals such as an elephant and a bull with one head, and so on. One of the pillars shows a chief seated on a throne holding a lotus in the right hand, the panel above having the figure of a seated sanyāsi holding the triple staff (tridaṇḡa). The metallic image of the god, about 3 feet high, is taken out in procession only once a year on the Rathasaptami day. On two pillars of the porch facing each other are sculptured figures of Râma and Lakshmana. The town has two Ânjanēya temples—the Haleyûr Ânjanēya and the Brahmapuri Ânjanēya, the latter so called because it is situated in the Brâhman street. The former is a big temple richly endowed and visited by a large number of devotees. Two new inscriptions were copied here. In the other Ânjanēya temple are also kept stone and metallic figures of Śrinivāsa. The Rāmēśvara temple is also a large Dravidian structure said to have been built by a Hāgalvāḡi chief. The sukhanāsi entrance has a figure of Gaṇapati to the right and Bhairava to the left. The left pillar in front of this entrance has a well carved seated figure, about 1½ feet high, in the attitude of meditation, wearing a snake-earring. Judging from the ornaments on the feet, hands and neck, it does not look like a ṛishi. The opposite pillar has a standing male figure, about 2½ feet high, with folded hands, which is supposed to represent the chief who built the temple. There is also a similar figure on one of the pillars of the porch. Other sculptures worthy of notice are Vyāghrapāda worshipping a linga and the hunter Kaṇṇappa piercing his eye with an arrow and kicking a linga. Two modern inscriptions were found on the temple vessels. The Rudrēśvara temple has a figure of Vīrabhadra flanked by Bhadrakālī and Daksha with a modern inscription on the brass plate of the pedestal. The Kēśava temple bears an inscription stating that it was built to commemorate the installation of the Mysore king Chāmarājēndra-Oḡeyar in 1881. The Kaṇṇappa shrine has an old wooden doorway elegantly carved with human and animal figures (Plate IV, 3). To its left is a linga cell on the back wall of which is carved a figure of Kaṇṇappa armed with a bow worshipping a linga. The village goddess (grāma-dēvate), Hirināvarada Yallamma, is a wooden figure, also known as Rēṇukādēvi, with a stone head set up in front. The processional image is a wooden figure of Paraśurâma, son of Rēṇukâ. To the right of Yallamma is a seated stone figure, about 1 foot high, of Jamadagni, husband of Rēṇukâ, with two hands, the right in the abhaya pose and the left placed on the thigh. Outside the temple are two small shrines containing round stones said to represent Mâtangi and her son Pâtappa. It is stated that once a year a member of a certain family in the town is made to sit on a diagram drawn in front of Pâtappa and that soon after, possessed by the goddess, he runs unconsciously to the particular house where the victim kid is kept, brings it to the temple and tears it to pieces with his teeth. A new inscription was discovered in a field to the south of the town, and a copper plate in the possession of Venkannachar was procured and transcribed. A large number of palm leaf manuscripts in the library of Handanakere Sama Jois was examined. They are written mostly in Nāgari characters. Most of the works contained in them are printed, near it, the lingas are named Hoysalēśvara, Brahmēśvara and Māchēśvara. The Maruṣasiddhēśvara temple has a panel carved with two standing male figures, about 1½ feet high, wearing long coats, with an intervening head. The figure to the left is Maruṣasiddha, that to the right Rēvaṇasiddha, and the head Allama. All the three were Virāśaiva teachers of about the time of Basava. The processional god is a bull which is taken out in a car once a year. The temple has a Bilvavriksha-vāhana, that is, a vehicle in the shape of a bilva or Bael tree. There are also in the village a number of samādhis or tombs of bulls dedicated to temples. EC, XII, Chikkanāyakanhalli 1 at Daḷavāyikatṭe near Jōgihalli was completely copied. Two new epigraphs were discovered at Honnebāgi. At some distance from the village is a hill on which is situated a temple dedicated to Ranganātha. It is of some interest to note that the pūjāri of the god is a Lingāyat and that the Lingāyats of the village conduct the annual car festival of the god. The Timmappa temple at Dugudihalli has a good figure, about 1½ feet high, of Vishṇu which is likewise worshipped by Lingāyats. To the north-west of Oḍḍarhalli is an important temple situated on an eminence dedicated to Henjērappa. Henjērappa is a form of Bhairava worshipped at Henjeru or Hēmāvati in the Madaksira Taluk of the Anantapur District, and it is not clear why the god at Oḍḍarhalli is known by this name. As far as my knowledge goes, there are no other places in Mysore where Bhairava is so named. The god of the Henjērappa temple at this village is a well carved figure, about 3 feet high with prabhā or glory, seated in lalitāsana with the right leg dangling, bearing a trident, a drum, a sword and a skull and wearing sandals and a necklace of skulls. His emblem, the scorpion, is shown on the pedestal. To the right in the navaranga is another seated figure, about 2 feet high, of Bhairava, which is known as Chēḷu (scorpion) Bhairava, and woe to him who offends the god: his house will be full of scorpions in every direction. The sukhanāsi has to the right a linga known as Siddharāmēśvara set up on an embankment which is said to have been the seat of penance of the Virāśaiva teacher Siddharāma. The temple is said to have been built or renovated by a Hāgalvādi chief. It has also a Bilvavriksha-vāhana. Two modern inscriptions were found on bells. Behind the temple are two mud platforms enclosing the roots of a country fig-tree and a banian tree, which are worshipped as Attimaradamma (goddess of the fig tree) and Āladamaradamma (goddess of the banian tree.)

Oḍḍarhalli.

The Śāntanallappa temple at Oḍḍarhalli has in front a fine lamp-pillar, about 2 feet square at the bottom and 40 feet high, with a lamp in the form of a stone cup on the top. The pillar has on the east face a linga, on the south the three-legged Bhṛingi bearing a viṇā or lute and dancing, on the west Vyāghrapāda with a censer in the right hand and a bell in the left, and on the north Nandī. Near the temple are the samādhis or tombs of the Lingāyat svāmis of the Kallu-maṭha at Seṭṭikere.

28. The Yōgamādhava temple at Seṭṭikere (Plate IV, 1), which faces east, is a Trikūṭāchala or three-celled Hoysala structure, with a stone tower over the main cell. It consists of three cells, a common navaranga and a porch, the main cell alone having a sukhanāsi. Latterly, however, a mukha-maṇṭapa or front hall in the Dravidian style has been built with the materials of a ruined Śiva temple now submerged in the tank. The goddess of this Śiva temple, a good four-armed figure, about 3 feet high, is now kept in a cell to the right in the front hall. The sukhanāsi doorway and that of the navaranga and its pillars are well executed. The ceilings, about 2 feet deep, are 14 in number, 3 in the 3 cells, 1 each in the sukhanāsi and porch and 9 in the navaranga, and all have lotus buds surrounded by rows of petals. The one in front of the north cell shows crossbars and that of the porch painted petals. At the sides of the sukhanāsi entrance are beautifully carved figures of Gaṇapati and Mahishāsuramardini. The god in the main cell, known as Yōga-Mādhava, is a seated figure, about 5 feet high with prabhāvali or glory, with 4 hands, the upper ones bearing a discus and a conch, the lower placed palm over palm exactly like those of a Jaina Tirthankara, without the dhyānamudrā or meditative pose noticed in the figure of Yōga-Nārāyaṇa in Plate V of last year's Report. Such a figure does not seem to be found elsewhere. The north cell has Lakshminārāyaṇa and the south Vēṇugōpāla, both about 5 feet high. The latter stands under a honne tree flanked by consorts. There are also, as usual, cows, cowherds, cowherdesses and sages sculptured at the sides. All the three images are well executed and their prabhāvalis sculptured with the ten incarnations of Viṣṇu. The outer walls have no figure sculpture, but only pilasters and miniature turrets. From the inscription in the navaranga (Chikka-nāyakanahalli 2) we learn that the temple was built in 1261 by Gōpāla-dandanāyaka during the reign of the Hoysala king Nārasimha III. It names the village Bharitaprakāśapura and the god Yōganātha. At the top of the slab is a small figure of Yōga-Mādhava resembling the image in the main cell. The temple, which is in a state of disrepair, deserves conservation. The roof has to be waterproofed and some arrangement made to let in light to the dark interior. Krishnamacharya, the archaka of the temple, presented to my office a metallic figure, about 9½ high, of a warrior armed with a sword and shield (Plate IV, 2), which he said he had picked up on the road from Birur to Kadur about 2 years ago. The image attracted my particular attention because I had noticed similar stone figures, about 1½ feet high, in a shrine at the entrance to the village. The present figure may be looked upon as the processional image of that shrine, though it is not clear what these figures are intended to represent. The Ranganātha temple, which is said to be older than the Yōgamādhava, has a standing figure, about 3 feet high, of Viṣṇu, holding a discus and a conch in the upper hands and a bow and an arrow in the lower ones. A similar figure found at Chennagiri is called Bête (or hunting) Ranganātha. There are two goddesses named Śrīdēvi and Bhūdēvi, both in lalitāsana, in two cells at the sides of the garbhagriha.

29. At the entrance to Balḷekatte stands a panel containing a horseman holding, the reins in the left hand and a sword in the right hand attended by an umbrella-bearer. Such figures are known as Rāme-dēvaru in other parts of the country. The ruined Māsti-guḍi near the Bhairava shrine at Pōchakatte has a slab carved with a couple. The wife has her right hand raised at right angles to the arm and wears two fillets round the head resembling the lower part of a crown. The Īśvara temple at Dodḍa-Bidare has in the navaranga several figures such as Sarasvati, Mahishāsuramardini, Umāmahēśvara, etc., among which a two-armed Durgā with a sword in the right hand and a cup in the left and a fine Nāga stone deserve notice. The Pāte-linga temple has for objects of worship 101 small stones of irregular shape placed on the ground, known as Nūrondu (101)-linga. In front of it is an open maṇḍapa containing a rough stone called Pāte (for Pātāla)-linga. In the porch of the Ānjanēya temple at Chikka-Bidare are set up against the wall figures of Gaṇapati, Bhairava and Viṣṇu and two fine Nāga stones, which apparently belonged to some Śiva temple. Kandikere has a ruined fort surrounded by a moat. The Gōpālakrishna temple has a fine figure of the god, about 5 feet high with prabhā, with cows, etc., carved at the sides. The processional image of some ruined Śiva temple is also kept near the god. In the navaranga are kept figures of Viṣṇu and Śūrya, the latter flanked by female archers as usual. There is also a basti here dedicated to Śāntinātha, a standing figure about 4 feet high. At some distance to the north-west of the village is a good structure on an eminence, named Kalyāṇadēvara-maṭha, and a Śiva temple, both of which have gone to ruin. The buildings seem to have been deliberately dismantled, the architectural members such as pillars, beams and jambs, and lingas and Nandis lying pell-mell about the place. It is said that a large number of stones was removed and utilised for the construction of the Bōrankanive dam. Near Kandikere are also to be found a number of tombs of temple bulls (see para 27). In the navaranga of the Śiva temple at Barkanhālu are several well carved figures such as Virabhadra, Sarasvati, Viṣṇu, Śūrya flanked by female figures without bows, and two free Śaiva dvārapālakas about 1½ feet high. Four new epigraphs were copied here. In the veranda of the Ānjanēya temple at Kere-Suragondanahalli is a round stone marked

Kere-Suragonḍanhalli. with uṇmam, which is worshipped under the name of Ānjanēya temples in these parts. The Siddharāmēśvara temple at Elanaḍu is a Elanaḍu. large Dravidian building with two mahādvāras on the east and south. The ceilings of the south porch were once painted with figures, most of which have now gone. The Viraśaiva teacher Siddharāma is said to have performed penance here. The god worshipped in the temple is an ant-hill which is decorated and given the appearance of a linga. The processional god is also a silver linga. The temple appears to be a rich one, judging from the silver-plated doors, doorways and palankeens, and silver staves, chauris, vessels and other paraphernalia. It has also a fine Bilvavriksha-vāhana in the shape of a car, adorned with painted images, etc. The car-maṇṭapa surmounted by a tower is a neat structure with a flight of steps. The village has also a Lingāyat maṭha, which is a brach of the maṭha at Gōdekere in the same taluk.
 Two modern inscriptions were found on bells.

30. The Virabhadra temple at Yagachehalli has a spirited figure of the god with only two hands, the right hand holding a sword and the left a shield. Mārūḷe Mārūḷe. has some fine māstikals. In one of them the husband holds a sword in the right hand with the point turned towards the ground, the left hand being placed on the waist. His wife wears a crown surrounded by flames, her right hand with a lime on the palm hanging by the side and her left hand holding a mirror to the front. Another shows a well carved and richly ornamented couple, of whom the husband, adorned with an uttariyam or upper cloth, bears a sword under the right arm-pit, the hand being placed on the breast. The left hand hangs by the side. The wife has her right hand raised and open showing a lime on the palm, the left hand dangling with a mirror. A new inscription was copied at the village. Also one each at Seṭṭihalli and Bēdarhalli. The Mallikārjuna temple at Pankajanhalli, vulgarly known as Pankajanhalli. Kangasanhalli, is a fine Dravidian structure of large proportions, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a pradakṣhiṇa, a navaranga, a porch, a pātālāṅkana or hall on a lower level, a Nandimaṇṭapa with a tower, a mahādvāra and a prākāra. It faces east and has an open veranda attached to it all round. The linga in it is a conglomeration of pebbles, said to represent 101 lingas. Near it are two metallic images of Umāmahēśvara, one larger than the other. In the pradakṣhiṇa are kept figures of Viṣṇu, Bhairava and Gaṇapati, as also another nude figure of Bhairava which is wrongly supposed by the villagers to represent a Jina. The mahādvāra, about 12 feet high, is a good piece of work, the pillars and doorways being well executed. To the right of the inner doorway, i.e., the one facing the temple, is a figure of Śiva and a figure of Sūrya flanked by female figures holding a lotus in the left hand; and to the left, a figure of Śiva, a female figure with the right hand raised holding what looks like a fruit in the palm and the left hand dangling pecked by a parrot, and a smaller female figure with a similar right hand but with the left hand placed on the waist. The meaning of these figures is not clear. The outer doorway has at its sides Gaṇapati and Bhairava. On both sides of the two doorways are pairs of well carved elephants, some facing each other with their trunks intertwined. In a line with these the north and south walls also have four elephants each. Among the sculptures on the pillars may be mentioned Kannappa armed with a bow, piercing his eye with an arrow and kicking a linga canopied by a three-hooded snake; Śakti-Gaṇapati, i.e., Gaṇapati with his consort seated on the thigh; and a tall linga, representing the form of Śiva known as Lingōdbhavamūrti, with a boar (Viṣṇu) at the bottom and a swan (Brahma) at the top. There is a fine lamp-pillar in front, about 2 feet square at the bottom and 40 feet high, with a pavilion at the top. To the left of the temple is the shrine of the goddess, a pretty large building with a prostrating figure, about 5 feet long, in the middle of the pātālāṅkana. The goddess, about 4 feet high, is a standing figure with 4 hands, the upper holding a noose and an elephant-goad, the lower being in the fear-removing (abhaya) and boon-conferring (varada) attitudes. It may be compared with the figure of Ādhāraśakti given on Plate IV of last year's Report. The Virabhadra temple to the south has a figure, about 5 feet high, of that god with 6 hands, the attributes being a sword, a shield, a trident, a drum, a bow and an arrow. Bhadrakālī to the left has a lotus for her attribute. To the north of the temple is a large pond with a small neat maṇṭapa

in the centre. The Ranganâtha temple has a standing figure, about 3 feet high, of Vishnu flanked by consorts, and two figures of Âlvârs in the sukhanâsi, but the pūjārī is a Lingâyat. Near it is a shrine with a huge figure, about 8 feet high, of Hanumān. Two new inscriptions were found at the village, as also two modern ones on the temple vessels.

31. The Ranganâtha temple at Huliyâr must have been a good Hoysala structure, judging from the garbhagriha, which is the only portion now left of the original building, the other portions being modern additions. The god, about 5 feet long, is a well carved figure reclining on Âdisêsha, with Brahma seated on the navel lotus and Śrîdêvi and Bhûdêvi seated with folded hands at the head and feet respectively. Above the god is the prabhâvali carved with the ten incarnations of Vishnu, Buddha being shown as the 9th incarnation. The ceiling of the garbhagriha, about 2 feet deep is carved with a lotus. In the sukhanâsi are kept a figure of an Âlvâr and a small figure of Dakshināmûrti with the hand in the dhyâna-mudrâ, flanked on the right by a female figure offering something and on the left by a male figure blowing some instrument. The processional image is also kept here on a stone pedestal which once belonged to a Jaina temple as is evidenced by an inscription discovered on it which states that it was the pedestal of a Jina figure set up by Śrîyâdêvi, consort of Sâmantha-Gôva. This image, as the inscription on its pedestal informs us, was prepared quite recently, in 1903, the old image having been stolen. The Gaṇapati shrine close by has a well carved image, about 5 feet high, of the god with a spirited rat on the pedestal. The right lower hand bears a broken tusk and the left lower a fruit whose stalk is held by the trunk. The Mallêśvara temple is a small neat Hoysala building with the tower and walls recently restored, the former with sculptured pieces of granite and the latter with brick and chunam. At the sides of the sukhanâsi entrance are perforated screens and figures of Gaṇapati. The navaranga has besides well carved figures of Saptamâtrikâh and Sarasvatî to the right and of Nârâyana flanked by consorts, Umamahêśvara with the emblems Nandi and mungoose on the base and Sûrya flanked by female figures without bows, to the left. The ceilings, though mostly flat, are exquisitely carved with lotuses having three concentric rows of petals. They are large square panels adorned with knobs all round. The garbhagriha, sukhanâsi and navaranga central ceilings, about 2 feet deep, have blown lotuses; the west ceiling has 9 blown lotuses, and the one in the south-west, perhaps the finest of all, has a swan carved on the under surface of the lotus bud. Among the figures kept in the veranda of the temple may be noticed a rishi standing with a staff in the right hand, and a man wearing a gonḍe (knot of hair) and uttariyam and holding an elephant-goad in the right hand and a fruit in the left. It is not clear whom the second figure represents. The village is strewn over with the architectural members and carvings of Hoysala buildings. A copper plate received from the Virakta-maṭha was transcribed, and a new inscription was discovered at Oḷagerehalli.

32. From Huliyâr a few villages in Hosdurga Taluk, Chitaldrug District, were visited. Heggere, about 7 miles from Huliyâr, has 4 buildings in the Hoysala style—3 Śiva temples and a basti. Of the former, situated near one another and in a dilapidated condition, the middle one, known as the Kallêśvara, is the largest, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanâsi and a navaranga, the other two, situated to its right and left, having only a garbhagriha and a sukhanâsi. It faces south, though the linga in it faces east, the east wall having a perforated window opposite to it. The sukhanâsi doorway has perforated screens at the sides and Gajalakshmi on the lintel. The navaranga has only one ceiling, about 2 feet deep, in the centre, which has a lotus bud with three concentric rows of painted petals. The garbhagriha and sukhanâsi have also similar ceilings. It is worthy of note that the paint is not gone though the temple goes back to at least 1232 (Chikkanâyakanhalli 27), if not to an earlier period. The navaranga has a good figure of Sarasvatî and a few fine Nâga stones, besides two pedestals, one of Vishnu and the other probably of Mahishâsuramardini. An inscription was found on Sarasvatî. The temple to the left, known as the Gaḷagêśvara, is the most ornate of the three. The sukhanâsi has an exquisitely carved doorway (Plate V, 1) with beautiful perforated screens at the sides, the lintel having a well carved Gajalakshmi in the middle and lions pouncing upon elephants at the ends. The pediment has rows of minutely carved figures illustrating scenes from the Rāmāyana, while every square of the screens has tiny figures representing the ten incarnations of Vishnu, the regents of the eight directions and so forth. The sukhanāsi ceiling, again, shows excellent workmanship (Plate V, 2). It is about 2 feet deep and has in the middle panel Tāṇḍavēśvara flanked by Gaṇapati and Subrahmanya, in the upper Pārvati flanked by Sarasvati and Lakshmi, and in the lower Nandi flanked by Brahma and Vishnu. All the figures are represented as dancing. In the interstices in the 8 directions 8 snake hoods are shown. The garbhagriha ceiling has a lotus bud. The temple to the right has a tower over the garbhagriha resembling those of the Lakshmiḍēvi temple at Dodḍa-Gaddavalli (see Plate III of last year's Report). The garbhagriha and sukhanāsi have domed ceilings, about 2 feet deep, with lotus buds. The lingas have been displaced in all the three temples. These buildings deserve conservation: the roofs have to be made water-tight, the walls repaired and new doors set up; and the cost will not be heavy. The Pārśvanātha-basti, built of black stone, is a fine specimen of Hoysala architecture, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaranga. It is an elegant structure possessing considerable architectural merit, being perhaps the only basti of its kind in the State. The sukhanāsi entrance has perforated screens at the sides, its pediment too being a perforated screen. The navaranga is supported by four good black stone pillars and its central ceiling, about 2 feet deep, has a lotus bud, and is similar to those of the garbhagriha and sukhanāsi, the other ceilings being square and flat adorned with lotuses of three concentric rows of petals surrounded by knobs, except the one at the entrance which has 9 blown lotuses. The original Jina image is gone and in its place there is now a small figure of Anantanātha. The outer walls have no figure sculpture, but only a row of fine flowers of various patterns all round. The basti was built in 1160 (Chikkanāyakanhalli 21) during the reign of the Hoysala king Nārasimha I by the mahā-sāmanta Gōvidēva in memory of his deceased consort Mahāḍēvi-nāyakiti and appears to form a fit memorial to the lady by its simplicity and elegance. The building richly deserves conservation. Fortunately it is in a tolerable state of preservation. The roof has to be waterproofed and the walls underpinned. Near the Śiva temples stands a good māstikal (Plate V, 3) having a female figure, about 3 feet high, with the right hand raised and open holding a lime between the thumb and forefinger and the left hand dangling at the side with a mirror. Flames are shown around the head and a giṇḍi or water-vessel with a spout is carved to the right at the bottom. At the entrance to Chikka-Byāladakere is a gōkal or cattle-stone with an unintelligible Telugu inscription on it. There are also a few sculptures here, of which may be mentioned a panel with two female figures standing side by side holding something in both the hands; and a fine māstikal containing a female figure holding a lime in the right hand and a mirror in the left, both arms akimbo, a giṇḍi being carved to the right at the bottom as at Heggere. A worn inscription was found at Dodḍa-Byāladakere.

33. The Chennakēśava temple at Aralaguppe (Plate VI, 1), about 4 miles from the Bāṇasandra Railway Station, is a fine building in the Hoysala style, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaranga to which is attached an entrance porch with verandas on both sides. Its plan is given on Plate VII. The temple stands on a high terrace facing east and has at the sides of the entrance two empty pavilions on a lower level, the upper ones having disappeared. On both sides of the entrance runs around the entrance porch a jagati or railed parapet consisting of these friezes—(1) elephants, (2) horsemen, (3) scroll work, (4) Purāṇic scenes, (5) seated Yakshas in niches surmounted by miniature turrets with intervening lions, and (6) a rail divided into panels by double columns containing figures, mostly warriors armed with sword and shield, between two beautiful bands, the lower of bead work and the upper of geometrical patterns. Beyond the jagati on both sides runs a row of large images of which, omitting those concealed by the Nārasimha temple attached to the south wall, the number now visible is 90. Of these, 47 are male and the rest female. Of the friezes below the row of large images, the first four are the same as those on the jagati, but the fifth and the sixth consist of yālis and swans respectively. The frieze of horses has camels in some places. Of the 47 male figures, 44 represent Vishnu and his forms such as Yōga-Nārāyana, Lakshminārasimha, Vēnugōpāla, Paravāsudēva, Lakshminārāyana and Kāliyamardana, the rest representing Gaṇapati, Garuḍa, etc. Some of the Vishṇu figures are made to bear unusual attributes such as a noose, a shield, a rosary, an elephant-goad, a lute, an arrow, a bow, a trident, a sword, a snake, a book and a sugarcane. Among the female figures may be mentioned dancing Sarasvatī 2 and Mōhini 3, as also one having for its attributes a discus, a conch, a noose, an elephant-goad, a fruit and a flower, and another with the same attributes except the last two instead of which it has a cup and a staff, the remaining figures represent-

Signed images. ing attendants, etc. It is interesting to note that about 15 images bear on their pedestals the signature of the artist Honōja, a name that has not been met with hitherto. About 12 more bear only his initial Ho. The signed images are almost all of them figures of Vishṇu. Three of these are shown on Plate VI. Above the row of large images runs a cornice and above this again a row of turrets and occasional female figures holding lotuses, surmounted by the eaves. Even over the roof are some fine figures and carvings. Above the outer doorway is a figure of dancing Sarasvatī. The garbhagriha is surmounted by a well carved tower. The god appears to have been newly set up, the original image, about 5 feet high, lying mutilated to the right in the navaranga. All the doorways are well executed. The sukhanāsi doorway has at the sides perforated screens and two elegantly carved niches containing, as usual, Gaṇapati and Mahishāsūramardini. Of the ceilings, which are 12 in number, that of the garbhagriha and the one in front of the sukhanāsi entrance are one foot deep and have 9 blown lotuses. The remaining 10, including those of the sukhanāsi and porch, which are about 3 feet deep, have lotus buds. They are of different designs and artistically executed. The four pillars of the navaranga with their capitals are exquisitely carved with bead and scroll work. Above the abacus are lions at the corners. There are four more such pillars on the verandas of the porch. The pilasters built into the walls, 12 in number, are also well carved. Above the verandas of the porch are perforated screens on both sides. There seems to be a narrow store-room over the roof with a secret passage leading to it. Judging from the palæography of the labels giving the artist's name, the temple appears to have come into existence about the middle of the 13th century. Attached to the south wall and concealing its sculptures, stands a temple of Nārasimha which is evidently a later structure. The god, known as Ugra (fierce) Nārasimha, is a seated figure, about 2 feet high, killing the demon Hiraṇyakaśipu. The concealed figures can be seen from the garbhagriha of this temple. It is very necessary that the garbhagriha of this temple should be shifted further south so that the south wall of the Chennakēśava temple with its beautiful sculptures might become visible. The latter ought to be conserved. The vegetation on the structure has to be destroyed, and the roof, which is said to be leaky, has to be waterproofed. The north wall, which is somewhat out of plumb, has to be set right.

The Kallēśvara temple at the village is an old Dravidian building facing east. The navaranga has a well carved doorway with Gajalakṣmī on the lintel and a row of dwarfs on the pediment, and a fine ceiling, measuring 6' by 6', of aṣṭa-dīkṣā-lakas, supported by 4 good pillars, with an elegantly carved Tāṇḍavēśvara in the middle and 4 doubled up hanging figures in the 4 directions believed to be ṛishis in difficult postures of penance. On the north and south walls are two fine pierced windows of scroll work. Behind the big Nandi in front is a shrine containing a figure, about 5 feet high, of Sūrya flanked by female archers. Opposite the north entrance is another shrine having a large figure, about 6 feet high, of Umāmahēśvara with a band above serving for prabhā, from which depend two Gandharvas. Opposite the Umāmahēśvara shrine stands outside a well carved but mutilated figure, about 6 feet high, of Vishṇu with his ten incarnations sculptured on the prabhā. Close to the temple are several linga shrines in different directions. A maṇṭapa in the village, known as Pāḷegār's chāvaḍi, is said to have been the darbār hall of a former chief.

34. Nonavinkere is one of the pancha-grāmas or five settlements of the Hebbār Śrivaishṇavas, the others being Kadaba, Māyasandra, Nuggihalli and Biṇḍiganavile. The Bēterāya temple here is a large Dravidian structure enshrining a fine figure, about 4½ feet high, of Śrinivāsa. The god is said to have been set up by Prasanna-Kōṇēri-ayyaṅgār, whose figure, wearing a beard and a cap, stands with folded hands on a pillar of the navaranga. He was a great devotee of the god Śrinivāsa of Tirupati.

and used to go on pilgrimage to that holy place every year. When he was unable to undertake the annual trip owing to old age, the god appeared to him in the guise of a Vaishṇava mendicant and disappeared after telling him that he would take up his abode in that village. The managers of the temple and the archaka are said to be his lineal descendants. The processional image is a very handsome figure. There are also stone and metallic figures of some Ālvārs and sages. The Gôpālakrishna temple, said to be older than the Bêṭerāya, is also a Dravidian building with three cells, the main cell having Kêśava, the north cell Yôga-Narasimha and the south Vêṇugôpāla. The last is an elegantly carved figure standing under a honne tree flanked by consorts with figures of cows, etc., at the sides. The temple is named after this deity. This building has to be looked upon as a rare instance of a trikūṭāchala in the Dravidian style, this feature being very common in Hoysaḷa structures. Here too the processional image is a very handsome figure. Two modern inscriptions were copied here. According to the sthala-purāṇa the place was once a jungle, and the presence of the image of Gôpālakrishna which had been buried under an ant-hill was revealed by a cow dropping milk on the spot every day. There are also five Śiva temples in the village—the Śāntêśvara, the Nonabêśvara, the Chaudêśvara, the Kallêśvara and the Gaurîśvara. To the south of the compound of the Nonabêśvara temple are lying mutilated figures of Durgā, Bhairava and Saptamātrikāh, and Nandis. The village goddess, named Uḍasalamma, is a seated stucco figure with the usual attributes, namely, a trident, a drum, a sword and a cup. No victims are sacrificed to her. On the occasion of the annual festival she is worshipped by a Brahman. In a small shrine on the tank bund is the goddess Gollamma, a standing figure, about 3 feet high, with 4 hands, the upper holding lotuses, the right lower in the abhaya attitude, and the left lower placed on the waist. A small four-pillared maṇṭapa is pointed out as the gaddige or tomb of the last Pālegār of the place. His palace is said to have once stood on the site opposite to the tomb and his pleasure garden behind it. A gold coin of the Hoysaḷa king Vishṇuvardhana with the legend Nonambavādi-gonḍa (see last year's Report, Plate XV), which had been converted into a ring, was shown to me by a merchant of the place, who believed that it was a coin issued by a Lingāyat Pālegār, that the emblem on the obverse—a śārdūla with a standing figure of Vishṇu—represented Umāmahêśvara seated on Nandi, and that the legend named the village Nonavin-kere. Close to the pond at Hinḍasagere is a figure, about 3 feet high, of Bhairava, seated in lulitāsana like Henjêrappa at Oḍḍarhalli (para 27). A new epigraph was discovered here. From an inscription found on the pedestal of the Jina image in the Nakara-Jinālaya at Haṭṭa we learn that the present name of the village is a contraction of Belgere-paṭṭana and that the image was set up by Maṛiyāne-danḍanāyaka along with some nakara or merchants. As we know from inscriptions that Maṛiyāne-danḍanāyaka was the father-in-law of the Hoysaḷa king Ballāla I, the basti seems to go back to the beginning of the 12th century. A new inscription was copied at Kibbanhalli.

A coin of Vishṇuvardhana.

Haṭṭa.

35. The Lakshminarasimha temple at Vignasante is a good building in the Vignasante temple.

Hoysaḷa style. It is a trikūṭāchala or three-celled structure facing north. The main cell, which alone has a sukhanāsi and is surmounted by a tower, enshrines Kêśava, the left cell Lakshminarasimha, and the right Vêṇugôpāla. All the figures are well carved, their prabhās being sculptured with the ten incarnations of Vishṇu. The door-lintels of the garbhagriha and sukhanāsi of the main cell have Gajalakshmi and Lakshminārāyaṇa respectively; that of the left cell Yôga-Narasimha and that of the right cell Vêṇugôpāla. At the sides of the sukhanāsi doorway are figures of Ganapati and Mahishāsura-mardini. The temple has a small porch and the remains of a mukha-maṇṭapa at some interval. The navaranga pillars together with the beams over them are elegantly carved with bead and scroll work. The ceiling of the porch and the central ceiling of the navaranga, about 3 feet deep, are domed and adorned with fine lotus buds; while the others, about 1½ feet deep, are square with small lotus buds. The porch is supported by two beautifully carved pillars, the capitals too being sculptured and adorned at the corners over them with lions attacking elephants. The inscription stone (Tiptūr 40) in the porch has at the top miniature figures of Kēśava in the middle, Vēṇugōpāla to the right and Nara-simha to the left, the last standing like the others, though inside the god is a seated figure. The outer walls have no figure sculpture, but only a row of flowers of various patterns as in the basti at Heggere (para 32) with here and there a few turrets and elegant pilasters. The plinth has several mouldings with rows of lions, bead work, etc. There are some figures and carvings over the eaves all round. The tower is carved from top to bottom and has rows of four figures one over the other in the four directions and rows of kalaśas or finials at the angles. From the inscription referred to above we learn that the temple was built in 1286 during the reign of the Hoysaḷa king Nārasimha III by his generals Appayya, Gōpāla and Mādhava, who were brothers and sons of the general Mallidēva. The village is named Iggaṇasante. The temple deserves conservation. There is a crack in the south wall of the Kēśava cell which demands immediate attention. The Bālalingēśvara temple is a plain Hoysaḷa building with a stone tower adorned with four figures one over the other in the four directions and a Hoysaḷa crest in front. The navaranga has only one ceiling in the centre with a lotus bud. The garbhagriha and sukhanāsi have also similar ceilings. The front hall appears to be a later addition. The Banaśankari temple has a well carved, though mutilated, figure, about 3 feet high, of the goddess, seated in lalitāsana with eight hands, several of which are broken, the attributes now visible being a trident, a drum, a sword and a shield. The Bhairava shrine has a panel carved with two goddesses, one larger than the other, seated in lalitāsana and bearing the usual attributes, a trident, a drum, a sword and a cup. Three new records were found at the village. Ālbūru has several records which are all printed (Tiptur 42-49). Of these, two artistically executed viragals deserve some notice. One of them near the Śiva temple, Tiptur 44, dated 1395, is not only beautifully engraved but also beautifully sculptured with caparisoned horses, elephants, etc. The other in a field to the north-west, Tiptur 47, which is 7 feet high and may be assigned to the close of the 9th century, is adorned with sculptures in several panels, among which may be mentioned two elephants bathing the hero seated on a throne at the top.

36. The temples at Turuvēkere were described in paras 8 and 9 of my Report for 1916. The Bēṭerāya temple has an old ornamental wooden cot used for the repose (śayanōtsava) of the god, which is said to have been presented to the temple by Katti Gōpālarāja-arasu, a Mysore general who lived about the middle of the 18th century. Tradition has it that the general was using the cot when encamped at Turuvēkere, that on trying to remove it when he was about to leave the place it could not be moved, and that on being told by the god in a dream that it was required for his use the general gladly left it behind and went his way. The processional image of the Kēśava temple in the fort is kept here. The car festival takes place in the month of Phālguna (March). The Mūle-Śankarēśvara temple is mostly similar to the Sadāśiva temple at Nuggihalli (last year's Report, para 26) in the formation of its tower and outer walls. There is a tradition that the interior of the temple was once set on fire by the Muhammadans, which appears to derive some support from the injured state of the pillars and beams, now replaced by rough ones. The Kallēśvara temple

at Hosahalli is a Hoysaḷa building consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaranga. The last has only one ceiling in the centre with a fine lotus bud, the others too having similar ceilings. The navaranga doorway is well carved and that of the sukhanāsi has perforated screens at the sides. The village goddess, named Hosahalliyamma, is a colored stucco figure. In the shrine of Bēvinamaradamma at Biganēnhalli are two female figures, one a little bigger than the other, seated side by side in lalitāsana, known as Doddamma and Chikkamma, holding the usual attributes in their four hands. A new inscription was found at the village. Other discoveries were two records at Naḍuvanhalli and one each at Araḷikere, Benakankere and Dabbegaṭṭa.

37. About the middle of June 1918 a tour was made to Nanjangūḍ, Mysore

District, and a number of villages in the taluk surveyed. The Śrikanṭhēśvara temple at Nanjangūḍ was described in para 37 of my Report for 1912. The top parapet of the prākāra around the temple has well executed stucco figures with labels below giving their names.

Mysore Archaeological Survey.

PLAN OF KESAVA TEMPLE, ARALGUPPE.

SCALE : 5 10 15 20 25 FEET.

Though not of great historical importance, these labels possess some value from a religious and iconographic point of view, as they furnish the names of different kinds of Bhairava, Gaṇapati, Subrahmanya, Dakṣiṇāmūrti, etc. The labels below some figures are gone, the figures themselves being damaged in some places. The object of worship in the Paraśurāma temple is an inscribed slab, measuring 3' by 2', containing the inscription E C, III, Nanjangūḍ 17. The middle of the stone is rendered black by smearing oil. The temple has many devotees including Lingāyats, who are said to receive tirtha or holy water here. According to the sthala-purāṇa a visit to the holy place Nanjangūḍ without a visit to the Paraśurāma temple is perfectly useless. There is a silver vajraṅgi or mask, measuring 3½' by 2', kept in the archaka's house, which has a figure of Paraśurāma holding an axe in the right hand, the left hand hanging by the side. An inscription at the bottom tells us that the mask was presented to the temple in 1861. Three new epigraphs were discovered in the town. Besides, an examination of the jewels and vessels belonging to temples kept in the taluk treasury and of the valuable articles in the treasury of the Srikanṭhēśvara temple, brought to light more than a dozen inscriptions nearly 100 years old. Of the silver vessels, etc., in the taluk Temple jewels and vessels. treasury, one was a present from the Mysore king Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III to the Onkāreśvara temple at Sinduvalli; three from Biga-Mallārājaiya, Mallājammaṇṇi and Hampe-arasu to the Mallikārjuna temple at Hura; three from Lakshmanammaṇṇi to the Kaivalyadēvi temple near Kaḷale; and two from Daḷavāyi Nanja-Rāja to the Lakshmīkānta temple at Kaḷale. The temple treasury has, besides numerous silver articles, a number of gold vehicles, vessels, and ornaments set with precious stones. Among these may be noticed a gold koḷaga or mask (for the linga) weighing 1½ maunds; 2 large gold plates and 11 cups; jewelled gold vajraṅgis for the processional image and its consort; gold ornaments for the goddess such as bracelets, anklets, crown, jaḍebhaṅgāra (worn over plaited hair) and sire-kuchchu (folds of cloth) and gold, pearl and emerald necklaces with jewelled pendants. From the inscriptions on them we learn that a gold snake vehicle (Śeṣha-vāhana), 2 gold plates, 3 silver vessels and a silver lampstand were the gifts of Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, and 2 gold ornaments, of the Śringēri guru Narasimha-Bhārati. Among other donors are Jahagīrdār Nanjappa, Venkaṭalakshamma and Marinaṇjavve. It is interesting to note that a silver cup set with five kinds of precious stones at the bottom was a present from Tippu. There is also a tradition that an emerald necklace in the temple was presented by Hyder as a thankoffering for the cure effected by the god of the eye-disease, pronounced incurable, of a favorite elephant of his. A temple vehicle, known as Rudrākṣhmaṇṭapa, was the gift of Lingājammaṇṇi of Krishnavilāsa-Sannidhāna, queen of Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III. A large number of coins, consisting of silver and copper pieces, kept in the taluk Coins. treasury, was examined. They were found to be mostly coins of Mysore and the British East India Company. There were also a few belonging to Hyderabad and Burma.

38. A new inscription was found at each of the villages Basavanpura, Hejjige Toremaṅvu and Immāvu. The last village has a temple of Rāma containing four-armed figures of Rāma and Lakshmaṇa. Rāma with four arms is occasionally met with; but not Lakshmaṇa. A Brahman of the village expressed his sorrow that a copper plate inscription in the possession of his family was lately melted and made into a vessel. It is not unlikely that the same fate has overtaken many more copper plates. Another Brahman of the same place said that he had a copy of a stone inscription at Huḷimāvu recording the grant of that village to one of his ancestors by the Mysore king Rāja-Oḍeyar. But no such record was found at Huḷimāvu. Hadināru is a village of considerable antiquity, judging from the number of Ganga records found in it. The progenitors of the Mysore royal family, Yadu-Rāya and Krishna-Rāya, are said to have taken up their residence here. It appears that some remains of a fort wall to the south of the village existed some years ago. The village is named Adirāru in the inscriptions (see Nanjangūḍ 21 and 129-132) and was the headquarters of a small district consisting of 12 villages. So, the present name is clearly a corruption of the old name, and the suggestion that it stands for Hadināḍu has no basis to stand upon. In the Vīrara-guḍi or hero-shrine near the tank bund is a four-armed, richly ornamented standing figure, about 3 feet high, wearing sandals, and bearing a discus in the right upper hand, a bow in the left upper, the right lower holding the hilt of a dagger stuck in the waist band and the left lower resting on a mace. To the right stands an attendant holding an umbrella with a very long shaft. The figure is said to represent Siddhês'vara but it is more probable that it represents a chief who fell in fight. Around the shrine are set up several small panels sculptured with a horse bearing a couple on the back with an umbrella-bearer behind. There are besides a few panels carved with a male figure, seated or standing on a two wheeled cart drawn by two bullocks, holding a whip in the right hand and the ropes of the bullocks in the left. It is not clear what these figures are meant to represent. A new inscription was discovered at the village. It may be stated here that the inscriptions Nanjangûd 129-133, which are wrongly printed as belonging to Mûdahalli, are at this village. Two new records were copied at Kupparvalli and one at Mûdahalli. The Mahâdêvi shrine at this village has a number of panels carved with riders on horses and drivers of bullock-carts as at Hadinâru. called Śrôtriyûr in a Chôla inscription of 1032, and Sottiyûr in a Hoysala record of 1169. The present form of the name occurs in the records of the Vijayanagar period. In 1169 it was the headquarters of Lakmayya, general of the Hoysala king Nârasimha I. The Sômêsvara temple is a three-celled Hoysala structure facing east, comprising, besides the cells, a central hall and a front hall. The last, which appears to be a later addition, was built in 1264; the other portions are apparently older. Here we have a rather rare instance of a Hoysala temple built of granite with a carved tower built of potstone. The main cell has a linga and the south cell a good figure of Harihara, the north cell being empty. Harihara, about 5 feet high, is a fine figure with 4 hands, the right upper bearing a trident, the left upper a discus, the left lower a conch and the right lower in the abhaya pose with a rosary. The image is flanked by Pârvati and Lakshmi and has on the pedestal the emblems Nandi and Garûda. The navaranga pillars, though made of granite, are elegantly carved. To the left in the navaranga is the figure, about 3½ feet high, of the goddess, standing on two mongooses and holding in the upper hands a discus and a conch and in the left lower a fruit, the right lower being in the abhaya pose with a rosary. The outer walls of the main cell have no figure sculpture, but only pilasters. The temple is going to ruin. The Nârâyana temple is also a Hoysala building with a brick tower, the navaranga and porch being built of granite. The god, about 3½ feet high, has no prabhâ. The attributes in the upper hands are a discus and a conch, which are quite natural, the lower hands being in the abhaya and varada attitudes. The garbhagriha and sukkanâsi have ceilings of lotus buds surrounded by rows of petals, and their outer walls have pilasters and elegant turrets over double pilasters with a hanging lotus bud between the latter. According to the inscription Nanjangûd 175 here, the temple was built by Lakmayya, referred to above, in 1169 during the reign of the Hoysala king Nârasimha I. The god is named Nâga-Kêśava in the epigraph. The temple is in ruins. The village has a Lingâyat maṭha which appears to go back to the 15th century, judging from the references made to it in the inscriptions. Its svâmis were once learned men and authors of some important works. One of the famous svâmis of the maṭha was Śivarâtri-oḍeyar. His gaddige or tomb together with those of some others is contained in a building to the left of the road from Kupparvalli. A new epigraph was copied at the village. The inscriptions Nanjangûd 160 and 161, as well as 164 and 165, were found to form together only one record. Both of them refer themselves to the reign of the Chôla king Râjendra-Chôla, and it is worthy of note that one of them is in the Tamil language written in Kannaḍa characters. I was told that the stones containing Nanjangûd 162 and 163 were buried in the jagali or raised seat newly built at the entrance to the maṭha.

39. The Durgâ-Paramêśvari temple at Nagarle has a four-armed figure, about

3 feet high, of Durgâ seated on a lion, trampling on a decapitated buffalo and holding in the upper hands a discus and a conch, the left lower holding a demon and the right lower piercing him with a trident. The village goddess Mâlgarasi is a seated stucco figure, about 3½ feet high, bearing in the upper hands a discus and a conch, and in the lower a sword and a cup. There is also a ruined Pârśvanâtha-basti here of some architectural merit. The god, about 5 feet high, is canopied by the seven hoods of a snake, whose coils are well shown on the back. The front hall has a well carved large ceiling of a square shape. A new epigraph of the time of the Chôla king Râjêndradêva was copied here. Another new record was found at Sargûr. This village has two figures resembling the so-called Siddhêśvara at Hadinâru (see previous para), as also two Okkai-mâstis (see para 13) at the entrance. Dodda-Kaulande has also a number of Okkai-mâstis; one of them near the Bhairava shrine has a lotus flower sculptured above the arm. There is also lying here a mutilated figure of the so-called Siddhêśvara. A new inscription was found on the back of Nanjangûd 108 and another in front of the Musâfirkhâna. Two new records were copied at Chikka-Kaulande, one at Viradêvanpura and three at Dêvanûr. The last village has several small temples. The Nârâyana temple has a good figure, about 3 feet high, of Nambi-Nârâyana flanked by consorts. The Puradayya temple to the south of the village has a bull seated on a pillar (upparige-basava). This portion of the village is said to be the site on which an old village named Pura once stood. Similarly the site near the Mallêśvara temple is said to have once been occupied by a village named Bâgûru. The Virabhadra temple has metallic figures of Śiva and Pârvatî together with a brass plate carved with Virabhadra, all being kept on a gaddige, said to be of Viśvêśvarârâdhya, who is supposed to have founded the village. A fine Lingâyat maṭha known as Gurusvâmi-maṭha was being built at the time of my visit by a non-English knowing craftsman from Coimbatore. The Virabhadra temple at Nê-

rale has a four-armed figure, about 4½ feet high, of the god with the usual attributes, the shield resting on the cut off head of a demon. In the navaranga is kept a Nandi-kôlu or Nandi pole, about 20 feet long, consisting of a bambu pole on which are strung alternately 12 each of what are called haraḍes (protuberant pieces) and chandragôḍas (discs) with a larger chandragôḍa at the top and a pavilion containing a Nandi at the bottom, all made of brass. The village is named Nîrîlî in the inscriptions. A number of sanads in the possession of Chennabasavadevaru, a descendant of Chikkayya, the builder of the chatra or choultry known as Chikkayyana chatra near Nanjangûd, was examined, and a few transcribed. Chikkayya was a contemporary of Hyder. He built besides the choultry a temple and a maṭha, making endowments for the upkeep of all. Of the sanads examined, 3 were issued by the Mysore king Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar II, 2 by Hyder and 1 by Kaḷale Nanja-Râja. The Gôpâlakrishna temple at Hemmaragâla is a Hoysala structure with a later navaranga added on to it. The god, about 4 feet high with prabhâ, stands below a honne tree with a discus and a conch sculptured at the sides. The processional image, known as Janârdana, is a good figure. In the navaranga are two modern cells enshrining the goddesses Rukmiṇî and Satyabhâmâ. In the prâkâra is kept a stone cot, measuring 7½ feet by 6½ feet, with four ornamental legs, decorated with a large lotus flower in the centre, lotus buds at the four corners and a two lined border all round. In the Bîrêdêva shrine are two lingas, one known as Śiva and the other, marked with nâmam, as Viṣṇu. Near them is kept a figure, said to be of Kumârasvâmi of Ajjigere, who built the shrine. In the prâkâra is a shrine of Balumankâlî, a standing figure, about 1½ feet high, holding in the upper hands a trident and a drum and in the right lower a sword, the left lower being placed on the waist. Two new inscriptions were found at the village.

40. The Lakshmîkânta temple at Hedatale, which faces east, is a three-celled structure built of granite in the Hoysala style. It comprises besides the three cells a navaranga, a porch and a mukha-maṇṭapa. The main cell, which alone has a sukhanâsi and a stone tower, enshrines Lakshmîkânta in the form of Nambi-Nârâyana, the north cell Lakshmînarasimha and the south cell Vêṇugôpâla. The pillars in the navaranga are well moulded, and the ceilings, except the central one, are about 1 foot deep and carved with blown lotuses. The central ceiling, about 3 feet deep, is beautifully carved with a long pendant lotus bud. The porch has a large flat ceiling of nine lotuses. At an interval of a few feet from the porch stands the front hall, a grand structure supported by 24 pillars, of which the central four are elegantly carved, and adorned with 11 ceilings, about 3 feet deep, of hanging lotus buds. It has a varanda

all round and three entrances on the east, south and west. The northern portion is said to have served as the seat of a former chief who could see from there the faces of all his sixteen sons-in-law seated on different portions of the varanda leaning against the rounded back stones. Hence the hall is known as Hadināru-mukhada chāvaḍi or the darbar hall with sixteen faces or openings. Here we have a rare instance of a Hoysala temple with all its parts built of granite. The building deserves conservation. From the inscription Nanjangūd 92 here, we learn that the temple existed before 1292. A new Tamil epigraph was copied here. The Nagarēśvara temple, situated on the bank of the Guṇḍal (Kaunḍini), is also a Hoysala building in granite with a stone tower. It consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a navaranga, a mukha-maṇṭapa and a porch, the last two looking like later additions. The navaranga ceilings are similar to those of the Lakshminikānta temple described above. The temple is in a dilapidated condition. Several stones of the garbhagriha wall have been washed away by the river. A new Tamil inscription was discovered near the temple. A good Viṣṇu figure, about 4 feet high, was found standing near a hedge to the west of Gaurimāda Ranganayaka's field at some distance to the village. At Badanālu is lying mutilated a Jina figure, Badanālu. about 3½ feet high, with a well carved prabhā, adorned with a mukkoḍe or triple umbrella and flanked by male chauri-bearers. Near the Siddappa temple to the west is also lying a figure, about 3½ feet high, of Nanbi-Nārāyaṇa. These figures bear evidence to the existence at one time of a Viṣṇu temple and a basti here. Two new records were copied at the village.

41. Towards the end of June 1918 I made a short tour to Jagalūr Taluk, Chitaldrug District, with the object of inspecting a pond named Daḷavāyi-hoṇḍa near Bistuvalli, about whose repair there had been some correspondence. Daḷavāyi-hoṇḍa, about 2 miles to the west of Bistuvalli, is a symmetrically built pond, about 30 yards square, with flights of steps on all the four sides. There is

Daḷavāyi-hoṇḍa. some ornamental work in the middle of the parapet all round. The pond is mostly buried. According to a chronicle in the possession of the Patēl of Bistuvalli, which gives an account of the Chitaldrug chiefs, it was built by Muddanna, the daḷavāyi or general of Hiri-Medakēri-Nāyaka at the close of the 17th century. He also built to the north a fine maṇṭapa of dressed stone supported by sculptured pillars for the use of the god Ranganātha of the adjacent hill known as Koṇachagal-guḍḍa. One of the sculptures is an ingenious combination of three cows with one body and three heads in different postures. To the north-west of the maṇṭapa is the shrine of Urekoṇḍappa, a round stone marked with nāmam, which is said to be the original god of the place, older than Ranganātha. The Ranganātha temple on Koṇachagal-guḍḍa has Koṇachagal-guḍḍa. its garbhagriha in a cave, and the god is in the form of a round stone (udbhava-mūrti) marked with nāmam. In an adjoining cave to the right is the goddess named Lakkamma or Toḷasamma, a small figure, about 1½ feet high, standing half-buried with a lotus in the right hand, the left hand hanging by the side. At the garbhagriha entrance are kept a few old swords and other weapons which are said to be used for performing pavāḍa or miracles during the annual festival in the month of Chaitra (April) when thousands of people collect together. At the foot of the hill is a rough stone to the right, known as Chēḷappa, to which offerings of scorpions made of silver, jaggery, etc., are made to escape from scorpion stings. Higher up stands a boulder called Talebōlu-guṇḍu against which those who have undergone tonsure in fulfilment of vows are required to knock their heads thrice. Further up is a conical stone, about three feet high, known as Ariṇe-guṇḍu, near which potters and others keep the pots (ariṇe) which are thence removed by the pūjāri to the temple. Marriage parties also leave their ariṇes and bāsingas (marriage fillets) here and then enter the temple. The pūjāri of the temple is a nāyaka or a man of the hunter caste. A

Jagalūr. modern inscription was found on a bell. The Jōgappa shrine at Jagalūr has a standing figure, about 3 feet high, of a rishi, holding a trident in the right hand and a kamaṇḍalu or water-vessel in the left. A small shrine below a margosa tree has a goddess known as Kemmavva, a seated figure, about 1½ feet high, bearing a trident and a drum in the upper hands, whose worship is believed to cure any kind of cough. The goddess in the Uḍasalamma shrine is a two-armed seated figure, about 2 feet high, with neither pedestal nor attributes—she looks as if hanging in the air. The Lingāyat Kallu-maṭha has the gaddige of Tōṭada-svāmi, said to have been one of the svāmis of the Muragi-maṭha.

42. About two miles from Chitaldrug is situated near a tank the Muragi-maṭha, a grand building in two storeys with a lofty mahādvāra or outer gate known as Āne-bāgilu, which has also an upper floor where the svāmi receives European and other visitors. The chief object of worship in the maṭha is the gaddige of Immadi-Muragi-svāmi, who is said to be the founder of the institution. Only bachelors can become the svāmis of the maṭha. Two new inscriptions were found at the Ankli-maṭha near Chitaldrug. The Chandravalli site was inspected and a few pieces of old pottery and a roofing tile were procured. The temple jewels and vessels kept in the Taluk Treasury were inspected and the inscriptions on some of them noted. A few sanads in the possession of Saiyad Mohiyaddin Huseni, the Town Kāji, were examined. Three of them, issued by the Mysore king Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III in 1814, were transcribed. The Bail-Gaṇapati at Hoḷalkere is a huge figure, about 9 feet high, seated on a high pedestal marked with the rat emblem in the open ground enclosed by a low compound.

43. On my way back from Chitaldrug I halted at Arsikere and surveyed a few villages of the taluk. The Īśvara temple at Arsikere, which faces east, is a remarkable building in the Hoysaḷa style of architecture (Plate I). It consists of a garbhagriha, an open sukhanāsi, an open navaranga, a small rectangular inner porch, a square outer porch and a circular mukha-maṇṭapa which may have once enshrined a Nandi. The garbhagriha doorway is beautifully carved: each architrave has 5 fascias—the innermost carved with geometrical patterns, the next with scroll work, the next in the form of ornamental pilasters, the next carved with lions standing one over another and the last with scroll work again. The projecting panel below the door-lintel has Gajalakshmi and the pediment, standing over a fine cornice, has in the centre a standing figure of Śiva flanked by rearing lions as well as standing figures of Gaṇapati and Brahma on the right and of Subrahmanya and Viṣṇu on the left. The ceilings of the garbhagriha, sukhanāsi and the square porch, about 2 feet deep, are flat with 9 projecting circular panels containing Tāṇḍavēśvara in the centre and attendant musicians around. The navaranga has 8 elegantly carved niches with dvārapālakas at the sides; two of them are at the sides of the sukhanāsi entrance and the rest opposite to one another on the north and south. All the beams of the temple are adorned with bead and scroll work. The navaranga pillars are well executed with bead work and sculptured on all the four faces at the bottom with figures of Viṣṇu, Bhairava, Durgā and so forth. The ceilings, except the one in the centre which is about 5 feet deep, are about 3½ feet deep and have lotus buds. Each of the four beams below the central ceiling, which has likewise a lotus bud, is carved with twelve standing figures on the inner face. The ceiling of the inner porch, about 1 foot deep, is carved with a lotus. All the ceilings show elegant workmanship. The square porch has two entrances on the north and south. The mukha-maṇṭapa, unique in design and execution, is a grand circular structure supported by 21 pillars, of which 8, adorned with bead work, are in the middle, and the remaining 13, which are rather plain, stand on the veranda all round. Below each plain pillar the veranda has 2 standing elephants facing different directions, the number of such elephants being 26 in all. The maṇṭapa has a beautiful dome-like ceiling with five rows of carvings: the bottom row has figures all round the beams; the next row has 8 small niches, mostly empty, with intervening lions; and the remaining three rows consist of lotus buds or knobs of gradually decreasing size. The centre is adorned with a big lotus bud. The outer walls of the temple have only a row of large images, numbering in all 120, of which 58 are male and the rest female. Of the male figures, nearly 30 represent Viṣṇu and 19 Gaṛuḍa standing with folded hands near Viṣṇu figures. There are also a few figures of Śiva. It is worthy of note that 22 of the Viṣṇu figures bear labels giving their names. Among female figures, 7 represent the seven mothers, Saptamātrikāh, and a large number the consorts of Viṣṇu figures, the rest being attendants, etc. The outer walls of the navaranga have a niche on the north and south. The number of figures from the entrance to the niche on either side is 15, those beyond being 90. The images are mostly on pilasters between miniature turrets. The pilasters stand on well carved plinths and have seated Yakshas on three sides at the top and swans and turrets on the capitals. There are also some turreted pilasters here and there. The garbhagriha is surmounted by a carved stone tower. The embankment in front of it has Tāṇḍavēśvara on the front face and a modern Nandi in mortar in place of the usual Hoysala crest. Outside the mukha-maṇḍapa runs all round above a moulded plinth a railed parapet carved with two friezes and a rail. The first frieze has seated Yakshas in niches and the second miniature turrets with intervening figures. The rail, which is mostly gone, is divided into panels by double columns containing figures or flowers with lions at the corners. From EC, V, Arsikere 70 we may perhaps infer that the god was known as Kattamēśvara and that the period of the temple was about 1220.

To the left of the temple stands a double temple with an intervening niche as at Halebidu, though of small proportions and devoid of high ornamentation. It seems to be known as Halavukallu-dēvasthāna. Both the shrines have a garbhagriha with a linga and an open sukhanāsi with a common hall in front supported by 24 pillars of a red color and adorned with 21 ceilings, about 1 foot deep, of lotuses and a veranda all round. The jambs of the doorway of the south shrine have at the bottom figures of Manmatha, dvārapālakas and female chauri-bearers canopied by a snake-hood, those of the north shrine, however, having male figures in place of chauri-bearers. Both have flights of steps leading to them flanked by elephants. The hall is in a dilapidated condition. There is lying in it a mutilated figure, about 5 feet high, of a standing Ganapati. From Arsikere 84 we may infer that one of the lingas was known as Ballēśvara and that the double temple was in existence in about 1220. The compound is strewn over with mutilated figures of Durgā, Ganapati, Mahishāsuramardini, etc., along with the architectural members of some temple which is no longer in existence.

The Sahasrakūṭa-Jinālaya, recently restored by a private individual, is also a Hoysala building founded in 1220 by Vasudhaikabāndhava Rēcharasa, a minister of the Hoysala king Ballāla II. The ceilings are deep and well executed. The object of worship is a mountain containing 1000 Jina figures. The outer walls have no figure sculpture. The front of the basti is disfigured by a low tiled roof.

44. The Śambhulinga temple to the north-west of Gijihalli is a small Hoysala building in ruins. It consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaranga, and has perforated screens and ceilings adorned with lotuses. Three new inscriptions were discovered here, as also one at the entrance to the village. Arsikere 118, standing in Nanjanna's backyard at Bommēnhalli, is one of the largest inscription stones, being more than 10 feet high and 3 feet wide. The materials of the Hoysala temple mentioned in it are scattered about the place. A new inscription was found on the sluice of the tank here. Aggunda has two ruined Hoysala temples dedicated to Śiva and Vishṇu. The Śiva temple, consisting of only a garbhagriha and a sukhanāsi, has perforated screens and lotus ceilings. The sukhanāsi door-lintel has in the centre Tāṇḍavēśvara flanked by Nandis, the right one seated and the left one standing on a pedestal, and makaras with Varuṇa seated on them. Below the seated Nandi is a drummer and below the other a female figure. The Vishṇu temple, known as the Lakshmīkānta, consists of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi and a navaranga adorned with lotus ceilings. The god, about 4 feet high, is badly mutilated. At the entrance to the village is a slab sculptured with a pretty large cow, intended perhaps for a gōkal or cattle-stone which generally has some diagrams on it without any figure. The village appears to have been a place of some importance at one time. It is stated that in parts of the village digging exposes ash-pits, bones and old pottery. Two new inscriptions were copied at Gollarahatti to the north of the village.

One of them is above a small figure seated in a niche on a pillar of the navaranga of the Kallēśvara temple. The figure, adorned with necklaces of rudrākshi, holds a rosary in the left hand and something indistinct in the right; and the inscription says that whoever adores it will have good fortune. It may not be out of place to state here that in several parts of the country the gollas or cowherds and goatherds live at some distance from the village.

in separate quarters known as Gollarahatti. This is no doubt a good arrangement from a sanitary point of view; but it is said that some peculiar domestic customs of the gollas, such as keeping women in confinement in roppas or sheds outside the house for a period of 3 months, are responsible for this aloofness.

45. While at Mysore during the Birthday Festivities in June 1918, I inspected the Varāhasvāmi temple and the Śāntiśvara-basti at Mysore. The former is a fine Hoysala structure, especially the shrine of the goddess (Plate VIII), which has an elegantly carved doorway, well executed pillars and a good tower. The processional image of the temple (Plate IX, 2) has an inscription around the feet on the pedestal (Plate IX, 3) stating that the image was a present from the Mysore king Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar (1672-1704). This king is said to have procured the stone image of Śvēta-Varāhasvāmi from Śrinuṣṇam and set up the god in a newly built temple at Seringapatam, but as the temple was demolished by Tippu, the god was removed to Mysore and set up in this temple in 1809. It is stated that Divan Pūrnaiya had this temple built with the materials of a Hoysala building in the Shimoga District. In the temple are kept two inscribed images representing the āchāryas (or sages) Dēśikar and Jiyar (Plate IX, 4 and 1). The former, also known as Vēdāntāchārya, was a Śrīvaiṣṇava teacher and author, who flourished in the 13th and 14th centuries, while the latter, also known as Varavara-muni and Maṇavāla-nāmuni, who was likewise a Śrīvaiṣṇava teacher and author, flourished in the 14th and 15th centuries. The inscriptions on the figures not only give their names but also state that they were presented by the Mysore king Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III to the Prasanna-Kṛṣṇasvāmi temple at Mysore which he built in 1829. It is not clear why the figures are found in the Varāhasvāmi temple. The Śāntiśvara-basti has also a few inscriptions on the pedestals of images and on vessels, etc., which are nearly 100 years old. Some of the latter were presents from Dēvirammanni, queen of the Mysore king Chāma-Rāja-Oḍeyar IX (1776-1796). My thanks are due to Mr. Padmaraja Pandit, late Pandit of the Archaeological Office, for supplying me with copies of these inscriptions.

While at Mysore I also examined a few manuscripts and lithographed works in the possession of Mr. M. V. Chandrasekhara Sastri. Many of them were found to be works composed by Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III or his court Pandits treating of a variety of subjects such as the history of the Mysore kings, praises of gods and goddesses, the geography of India, the game of chess and so forth. In the last year's Report, para 45, reference was made to some pictures with letter-press giving the genealogy of the Mysore kings found in the Jaganmōhan Palace at Mysore. One of them, engraved on a brass plate, is reproduced on Plate X. It is called santānāmbuja (progeny-lotus) and is in the shape of a lotus bud containing 22 kings seated on thrones under umbrellas, the one to the left at the bottom being Yadu-Rāya, the founder of the line, and the one at the top, Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, 22nd in descent from him. The letter-press around the figures gives the dates of accession and other details, and that around the lotus bud an account of the titles, virtues, literary works and pious acts of Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III. The plate was engraved in 1860 by the artist Tippanna.

46. Two sets of copper plates received from Mr. B. Tirumalachar, school-master, Tagare, Belur Taluk, have to be looked upon as important finds of the year. One of them, issued by a hitherto unknown Ganga king Polavīra, appears to be a genuine record of about the middle of the 6th century. It has some peculiarities not found in the other grants of this dynasty. The other, recording a grant by a new Kadamba king of the name of Bhōgivarina, may perhaps be assigned to the close of the 5th century. Both the sets are said to have been unearthed a few months ago while ploughing a field at the village Tagare.

47. Other records examined during the year under report were a copper plate inscription consisting of 9 plates (Plate X, 2), received from Mr. V. B. Alur, B.A., L.L.B., of Dharwar, recording a grant by the Vijayanagar king Harihara II; another of 3 plates (Plate XIV) procured by the Amildar of Maddagiri from the Jōḍidār of Sivanagere, which registers a grant by the Vijayanagar king Vīra-Narasimha; copies of 3 sets of copper plates found in a palm-leaf manuscript in the possession of Pandit Srinivasarangachar of the Archaeological Office, which record grants to some of his ancestors by the Vijayanagar king Kṛṣṇa-Dēva-Rāya and the Mysore king Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar; ten Tamil inscriptions of Periyapālayam, Erode Taluk, and Nāchchipālayam, Pāḷḷadam Taluk, both in Coimbatore District, found in the records of the office, which refer themselves to the reigns of the Ummattûr chief Nanja-Râya-Odeyar and of Sundara-Pândya, Vira-Pândya and Tribhuvana-chakravarti Kônêrinmaikonân; and one Persian sanad of the time of the Mughal emperor Muhammad Shâh in the possession of Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao of the Comptroller's Office. This sanad and another from Maddagiri together with impressions of the Persian inscriptions found at Sira and Pāvugaḍa were sent for favor of decipherment to Mr. G. Yazdani, M.A., Nazim, Archæological Department, Hyderabad State, who has very kindly sent me transcripts and translations of the same. Similar help was also kindly rendered by Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao, referred to above, in connection with a few Mahrâṭhi sanads received from Maddagiri.

48. Altogether the number of new records examined during the year under report was 304. Of these, 158 belong to the Tumkur District, 90 to the Mysore District, 28 to the Chitaldrug District, 10 to the Hassan District, 5 to the Bangalore District, 2 to the Kolar District, 10 to the Madras Presidency and one to the Bombay Presidency. According to the characters in which they are written, 20 are in Tamil, 12 in Persian, 5 in Nāgari, 4 in Telugu, 3 in Mahrathi, and the rest in Kannada. In almost every village that was surveyed the printed inscriptions were also checked by a comparison with the originals and corrections and additions made. The number of villages inspected during the tours was 187 in all.

49. While on tour the Kannada Schools at the following places were visited:—Maralûr, Tumkur Taluk; Agrahâra, Koratigere Sub-Taluk; Siddâpura, Maddagiri Taluk; Gāṇadālu, Dabbegaṭṭa, Honnebāgi and Duguḍihalli, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk; Aralaguppe, Tiptur Taluk; and Dêbûr, Nagarle and Nêrale, Nanjangûḍ Taluk.

Office work.

50. Besides the coins examined while on tour at Nanjangûḍ (para 37), 66 coins, consisting of 8 gold and 58 copper pieces, were also examined during the year. Of these, 8 gold coins were received from the Archæological Superintendent, Western Circle, Poona, and 58 copper pieces from Mr. M. N. Rangasami Iyengar, Triplicane. These were found to consist mostly of the coins of Vijayanagar, Mysore, Gaṇḍikôṭa and the Dutch East India Company, and of Sīvāji.

51. The translations of the Kannada texts of the revised edition of the Śravaṇa Belgoḷa volume have made good progress and about 130 pages of the manuscript have been sent to the press. Most of the illustrations have been prepared.

52. A portion of the General Index to the volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica has been sent to the press. The proof of the first form has just been received.

53. The Sanskrit and Kannada quotations met with in the revised edition of the Karnaṭaka Śabdānuśāsanam and the names of authors and works occurring therein have been arranged alphabetically as Appendices III to VI and sent to the press.

54. The printing of the Supplement to Volumes III and IV of the Epigraphia Carnatica has not made much progress, only 32 pages of the Kannada and Tamil texts having been printed during the year.

55. About 75 pages of the Kannada texts of the Supplement to Volume V of the Epigraphia Carnatica have been printed.

56. With regard to the publication of selections from the inscriptions concerning matters of historical and social interest, the selections made from all the volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica are being worked upon. Those that relate to history and religious belief are now being investigated into.

57. A Supplement to Volume IX of the Epigraphia Carnatica, consisting of nearly 400 newly discovered inscriptions, has been got ready for the press. Similar Supplements to Volumes X and XII of the Epigraphia Carnatica are receiving attention. The publication of these Supplements cannot be carried out expeditiously unless facilities are afforded for getting some of them printed at private presses.

58. The Monographs on the Kēśava temple at Belur and the Lakshmîdēvi temple at Doḍḍa-Gaddavalli did not make any progress owing to pressure of other work. The same was the case with the preparation of a classified list of Mysore inscriptions according to the dynasties of kings to which they relate.

1. "PROGENY LOTUS" IN JAGANMOHAN PALACE, MYSORE

2. DAMBAL PLATES OF HARHARA II

59. A copper plate and five precious stones found under the pedestal of a Bêtâla image in a ruined shrine at Belgâmi, Shikarpur Taluk, were sent by the Deputy Commissioner of Shimoga for examination. The plate has a worn diagram on it with a few letters here and there. With regard to the precious stones, Mr. V. S. Sambasiva Iyer B. Sc., L. C. E., to whom they were sent for examination, writes thus:—"The large crystal is topaz, colored and not very well suited to be cut and polished for a gem. The other four are sapphires, blue, not of superior quality. It may be of some interest to ascertain the agency that built the temple, with a view to a possible location of the place or places from which these stones have been obtained. If they have been found by the ancients anywhere in Mysore, an important discovery will have been made and the Geological Department might be suggested to prospect for them in the areas". The shrine in which these relics were found probably goes back to the 11th or 12th century and it is likely that the stones were found in Mysore. The custom of placing yuntras or diagrams, coins and precious stones below images when consecrating them is well known.

60. About 650 photographs of views of temples of artistic merit were prepared and sent to the Deputy Commissioners of Hassan, Mysore and Kadur for sale to the public. About 40 photographs were also sold at the Archæological Office.

61. The Photographer and Draughtsman prepared illustrations for the Annual Report for 1916-17, and for the revised edition of the Śravaṇa Beḡoḷa volume. He accompanied me on tour to the Hassan and Chitaldrug Districts and took photographs of a number of temples and sculptures. He was sent out to the Tumkur District to take photographs and to sketch the ground-plans of some temples and mosques.

62. The Architectural Draughtsman prepared eight plates illustrating the temples at Doḍḍa-Gaddavalli, Nuggihalli, Belur, Śravaṇa Beḡoḷa and Jinanāthapura.

63. A list of the photographs and drawings prepared during the year is given at the end of Part I of this Report.

64. The Assistant Photographer acting for the Half-tone Engraver helped the Photographer in printing the large number of photographs brought from tour for the office file and for sale to the public. He mounted the Half-tone blocks prepared for the Annual Report for 1916-17. He also accompanied the Photographer on tour to the Tumkur District.

65. The two copyists attached to the office transcribed the following works during the year:—(1) Kaulāgama, (2) Kuḷāraṇava, (3) Nighaṇṭurāja by Narahari-panḍita (in part), (4) Prabhudēvara-purāṇa by Hariśvara (in part), (5) Krishṇa-rāja-prabhāvōdaya by Śrinivāsa-kavisārvabhauma, (6) Krishṇarāja-śringāra-śataka by Nanjuṇḍa, (7) Chandrōdayavarnane, (8) Rasika-rasāyana, and (9) Nyāyasudarśana (in part). They also compared about 600 pages of transcripts.

66. Dr. J. N. Farquhar of Oxford, Rev. Father A.M. Tabard, M.A., M.R.A.S., Mr. Harold G. Alderton, Superintendent, Chamarajendra Technical Institute, Mysore, Mr. A. Rea, F.S.A., Rev. J. A. Vanes and Rev. Stanley Edwards visited the office during the year.

67. The office staff have done their work to my entire satisfaction. It has to be stated here that the office has during the year lost the services of two experienced old hands, of one by premature death and of the other by retirement. Mr. C. Chokkanna, the Head Clerk, who was a very useful hand both by his ability and by his long experience of archæological work, died suddenly of plague in August 1917. Padinaraja Pandit was not only a trained hand in archæological work but was also instrumental in procuring for the office many valuable Jaina works which it would have been almost impossible to get otherwise. He retired from the 1st July 1917.

1. Epigraphy.

68. A large number of the new records copied during the year under report can be assigned to specific dynasties of kings such as the Kadamba, the Ganga, the Nolamba, the Chôla, the Hoysala, the Pândya, and those of Vijayanagar and Mysore. There are also some records which relate to the Mughals, the Mahrâttas, and the chiefs of Nidugal, Harati, Ummattûr, Bijjavara, Chikkanayakanhalli and Chitaldrug. Among the archæological discoveries of the year, two sets of copper plates received from the Belur Taluk are of some historical value. One of them relates to the Kadambas and brings to notice for the first time two new kings, Ajavarma and Bhôgivarma, of that early dynasty. Its period is probably the close of the 5th century. The other set, which relates to the Gangas and registers a grant by a hitherto unknown king of the name of Polavîra of that dynasty, seems to be an authentic record of about the middle of the 6th century. A stone inscription at Halkûr, Sîra Taluk, is of special interest, as being the only dated lithic record so far discovered of the early Ganga king Śrîpurusha. It bears the date A. D. 788. Another inscription at Abbinahole, Hiriyûr Taluk, dated 1664, refers to the settlement of a dispute by recourse to the ordeal of dipping the hand in boiling ghee. A jewelled silver cup in the Śrikanthêśvara temple at Nanjangûd bears an inscription stating that it was a present from Tippu.

THE KADAMBAS.

69. There is only one inscription relating to the Kadamba dynasty, a copper grant received from Belur Taluk. It is noteworthy as recording a grant by king Bhôgivarma, son of Ajavarma, names not hitherto known from the published records of the early Kadamba dynasty.

Bhôgivarma.

70. The Kadamba plates (Plate XI) referred to above are three in number, each measuring $7\frac{3}{4}$ " by $2\frac{1}{4}$ ", the first and third plates being engraved on the inner side only. They are strung on a ring which is $3\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter and $\frac{1}{4}$ " thick, and has its ends secured in the base of a circular seal 1" in diameter. The seal bears in relief on a countersunk surface a lion standing to the proper right. The writing is in Haḷa-Kannada characters. The plates, which are in the possession of Mr. B. Tirumalachar, Schoolmaster, Tagare, Belur Taluk, are said to have been unearthed a few months ago while ploughing a wet field at Tagare.

71. The language of the inscription is Sanskrit with the exception of the last five lines which are in old Kannada; and, barring the invocatory verse and the three benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the whole is in prose. The record begins with a verse in praise of the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, which may be rendered thus:—Victorious is the eternal Viṣṇu, the husband of Lakshmi, who, in the form of a Boar, supported the earth at the end of the yuga. Then, as in other grants of the dynasty, the Kadambas are described as anointed after meditating on Svâmi-Mahâsêna and the group of mothers; as of a lineage purified by the final ablutions of the horse-sacrifice; as sons of Hariti; as fully versed in the critical study of their sacred writings; as belonging to the Mânavya-gôtra; as mothers of all their subjects; and as honored by all kings. A sun in the firmament of this family was Krishṇavarma-mahârāja, whose son was Ajavarma. His beloved son——acquirer of an extensive kingdom by the strength of his own arm; subduer of enemies; possessor of many enjoyments of various kinds procured by victory over enemies——was the glorious Bhôgivarma-mahârāja. The inscription then records that at the request of his son Viṣṇuvarma he granted, with pouring of water, the village named Kîrukûdalûr, which was one of the 24 villages belonging to the great village Tagare in the Tagare district, to the renowned Bhûtaśarma of the Kâśyapa-gôtra, who was a strict performer of the six duties. The maintainer of the grant was to obtain the merit of having performed a horse-sacrifice, and the confiscator was to incur the guilt of the five great sins. Then follow three usual final verses. The Kannada passage adds that the village was granted with exemption from the 32

imposts, and seems to mention the additional grant of a house in the northern street. The 2nd and 4th lines on the third plate appear to be a subsequent addition by a later hand. They tell us that Periyadigal granted Kiltivûr to Vinûar, as also an equal share below the tank of Kirukûdalûr. The witnesses were Mañiya and others (named). The inscription contains a few orthographical errors here and there.

THE GANGAS.

72. About half a dozen records relating to the Ganga dynasty were copied during the year. They include a set of copper plates of a hitherto unknown Ganga king Polavîra. Of the others, one refers itself to the reign of Śripurusha, one to that of Rājamalla II and two to that of Satyavākya Permānādi or Eṇeyappa. A few more inscriptions which are clearly of the Ganga period, though they do not name any king of that dynasty, will also be noticed under this head.

Polavîra.

73. The plates of Polavîra (Plate XII) referred to in the previous para, are three in number, each measuring 7" by 2", the first and third plates being inscribed on the inner side only. They are strung on a ring which is $2\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter and $\frac{1}{4}$ " thick, and has its ends secured in the base of a circular seal $1\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter. The seal bears in relief on a countersunk surface an elephant standing to the proper left. The writing is in Haḷa-Kannāḍa characters. The plates are in the possession of Mr. B. Tirumalachar, School-master, Tagare, Belur Taluk. They are said to have been unearthed along with the Kadamba plates noticed in para 70 a few months ago while ploughing a wet field at Tagare.

74. The language of the inscription is Sanskrit with the exception of the last two lines which are in old Kannāḍa: and, barring the three benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the whole is in prose. The record is of interest in several ways: it has many peculiarities not met with in the other grants of the dynasty. It does not open with the usual invocation of Padmanābha, but invokes Śankara and applies to him the epithet bhuvana-traya-śankara in imitation of the epithet gata-ghana-gaganābha applied to Padmanābha in other grants. Nor does it give the usual genealogy of the Gangas as other inscriptions do, but contents itself with giving only three steps, namely, Mādhavavarma, his son Avinîta, his son Nirvinîta, the last apparently standing for Durvinîta. The name Nirvinîta occurs in the old Siragunda stone inscription (E C. VI, Chikmagalûr 50), of about A. D. 500. The unusual names for kings, Avinîta and Nirvinîta, which mean ill-behaved or wicked, are explained in this record by adding the prefixes ahita and ari-narapa to them, thus giving us to understand that the kings were so only to their enemies. The full names according to this grant would be Ahitāvinîta and Arinarapa-nirvinîta. Nirvinîta's son Polavîra, a new name in the Ganga genealogy, who is the donor of the grant, is given the title Kāntāvinîta (well-behaved towards women). According to other grants Durvinîta's son was Mushkara. We have therefore to suppose either that Durvinîta had two sons Mushkara and Polavîra or that Mushkara was identical with Polavîra. The inscription does not give the regnal year as other grants do. In spite of these peculiarities, I venture to think that this grant is a genuine record of about the middle of the 6th century. Its language is not corrupt; its orthography is mostly unexceptionable; its characters are free from blunders, and its execution is good throughout.

75. We may now proceed to examine the inscription in detail. After invocation of the divine Śankara, the causer of happiness to the three worlds, the inscription proceeds to state that a moon in the firmament of the glorious Ganga family, profound as the great ocean, was Mādhavavarma: that his beloved son, born of the sister of Kṛṣṇavarma-mahārāja, inheriting the good qualities of his father, was Ahitāvinîta; that his beloved son, an equal of Yudhisṭhira, great like Mēru, possessed of forbearance like the earth, wicked to hostile kings in battle (Arinarapa-Nirvinîta), was Koṅgani-mahārāja; and that by his son, possessed of learning and modesty, a celestial tree to the birds the learned, of a fane white like the autumnal moon, Koṅgani-mahārāja, who was named Polavîra and bore the title Kāntāvinîta, for the increase of his merit and fame, was granted, on the full moon day of Vaiśākha, with pouring of water, exempt from all imposts, the village named Palachchoḡe, situated in Vallāvi-dēśa of Sēndraka-vishaya, in the presence of the witnesses Kanneḷa-arasa, Sikkamba, Perbārba of Ānandûr and others, to Nāgaśarma of the Kauśika-gōtra, a Taittiriya and a strict performer of the six duties. Then follow three usual final verses. The Kannada passage expresses a wish that he who wishes well of the grant may obtain a share in the merit and that he who wishes ill may incur the guilt of the five great sins. The record closes with an unintelligible sentence which seems to contain some names. Sēndraka-vishaya is also mentioned in the Bennūr plates (E. C. V. Belur 245) of the Kadanba king Vijayaśiva-Kṛṣṇavarma and Vallāvi-vishaya in the Bannahalli plates (Belur 121) of the Kadanba king Kṛṣṇavarma. In my Report for 1912, para 67, I identified Nirvinita of the Siragunda inscription (see previous para) with Avinita, but this grant seems to identify him with Durvinita, son of Avinita. In case Polavira is identical with Mushkara, this would be the first copper plate inscription yet discovered of that king.

Śrīpurusha.

76. Only one record of Śrīpurusha (Plate XIII, 1) was copied during the year. It is engraved on a pillar-like stone at Halkūr, Sira Taluk, and is the only lithic record so far discovered of this king with a Śaka date. Portions of the epigraph are worn. It tells us that, while Śrīpurusha was ruling the kingdom, in the Śaka year 710 corresponding to the cyclic year Prabhava (788), Addepara built a tank and made a grant to Palkūr for ? 12 years (pannerāṭṭu). Further on the name Kuttaṭṭu-gāmuṇḍa occurs. The inscription closes with an imprecatory sentence and one of the usual final verses. According to EC, VI, Mūdgere 36 and E C, IV, Nāgamangala 85 the year 788 would be the 62nd year of his reign.

To the same reign may belong three inscriptions at Guṇḍalhalli, E C, XII, Pāvugaḍa 11-13, now revised, which are by mistake assigned to about 1530. They are engraved on a rough boulder on the bund of the large tank at the village in characters of the 8th century. One of them (No. 11) records that Dālisindar granted on the occasion of the summer solstice of the cyclic year Jaya land that could be sown with 4 kaṇḍugas of seeds below Akaḷesamudra to Dēvadattar of the Kaṇḍinya-gōtra. Then follow these imprecatory and benedictive sentences :—He who opposes this shall be guilty of the five great sins and he who maintains this shall be a dweller in Vaikuṇṭha (the abode of Vishṇu). The engraver was Sindāchāri. The palæography leads us to conclude that the cyclic year Jaya here may correspond to A. D. 754. The remaining two inscriptions, which are not dated, are also of about the same period. One of these (No. 12) says :—This is the tank of the consort of Paramēśvaradēva-śatti, son of Gōpaya of the noble lineage of the most celebrated and stainless Māgutavaira-satti, son of Paṭukkanna-satti, who was the son of Vasundhapati, who was again the son of Biseya-satti. May this world-renowned tank Akaḷesamudra of Akaḷeti continue as her charity for as long as the moon, the earth and the ocean endure. The writer was Divyabhāṣhakalan (? possessed of divine speech), ruler of the village Tṛṇanāmagiri. The builder of the tank was Akaḷeti, and her good sons were Allaga and Dāliga. The suffix satti in the above names evidently stands for śakti. The third inscription records the grant of some land to the twenty by Jivani's son Niṭṭa-Rāman, and mentions Akaḷeti as the builder of the tank. Then follow the same benedictive and imprecatory sentences as those in the first inscription.

Rājamalla II.

77. A worn epigraph at Dēbūr, EC, III, Nanjangūd 27, now revised, refers itself to the reign of Rājamalla-Permanāḍi, lord of Nandigiri, and mentions Būtarasa. The details of the grant are gone, and we have only the usual final imprecatory sentence and three final verses. As Būtarasa was the younger brother of Rājamalla II, the latter seems to be the king referred to in the record. Its period may be about 875.

Eṛeyappa.

78. Two fragmentary records copied during the year refer themselves to the reign of Satyavākya-Permānāḍi. One of them on a slab built into the roof of the Sōmēśvara temple at Mūdahalli, Nanjangūd Taluk, is dated in the 12th year of his coronation, and the other to the left of Toreṇāvu of the same Taluk, seems to be dated in Pingala which probably corresponds to 897. The king intended appears to be Eṛeyappa. In the first inscription the details of the grant are gone. The second, a viragal, mentions śrī-rājya (the fortunate Ganga kingdom) and records the death during a cattle-raid of Kaliyanna and the grant for him of land that could be sown with 5 koḷagas of seeds at Maṇali. It closes with this sentence—To him who covets this everlasting happiness will be out of the question. Another viragal at Buraganhalli, Koratigere Sub-Taluk, which records that during an incursion, by order of Pemnadi, of Indara, younger brother of the queen (mahādēvi), Gaṇḍakēsari and Nipakēsari's sons Hoyya, Māranna and Aṇkayya fought and fell at the siege of Gaḷanjanūr, may also belong to the same reign.

Rāchamalla III.

79. An inscription at the entrance to the Sômēsvara temple at Chikka-Kaulande, Nanjangūd Taluk, which appears to be dated 920, records that Permānadi granted Kiriya-Kavilandi as an agrahāra to Ti ma-bhaṭṭa. The Permānadi of this record is evidently Rāchamalla III.

80. A few more records which from their palaeography appear to belong to the Ganga period, though no king is named in them, may also be noticed here. A viragal at Doddāgaṭṭa, Turuvékere Sub-Taluk, records that Śivaminā-gāmunḍa's son . . . dāra . . . fell during the destruction of Gangavūr, and that some one else (name gone), having rescued the cattle, became an inhabitant of heaven. Another at the same place records the death of some one who had among others the title abhimāna-Mēru (a Mēru in self-respect). A third at Halkūr, Sira Taluk, seems to state that in the month of Kārtika of the year in which Kāmēsvara-bhaṭṭāraka ascended to heaven, Porasidēva, having killed many during a cattle-raid, ascended to the heaven of heroes. The period of these records may be about 900.

THE NOLAMBAS.

Ponnēra.

81. There are three records relating to the Nolambas. One of them (Plate XIII, 2), copied at Śrāvāṇḍanhalli, Maddagiri Taluk, is engraved in characters of the 8th century and mentions incidentally Ponnēra, who is probably identical with the Nolamba king Chāru-Ponnēra, along with Chōla-mahārāja. It opens with praise of Prabhumāni, who is described as supremely fortunate, as a scent elephant to his enemies and as a filfiller of the wishes of Brāhmans, and states that, in case they refuse to make the customary ? payments (tera), Ponnēra and Chōla-mahārāja shall incur the guilt of having killed thirty Brāhmans. The engraver was Dhanapati-āchāri. The purport of the inscription is not quite clear. It is not known who Prabhumāni was. Chōla-mahārāja was evidently one of the early Chōla chiefs in the country around Hēnāvati and Niḍugal. Another fragment at the same place, EC, XII, Maddagiri 73, now revised, which mentions Nityamanōharan (always charming) of ṭa-nāḍu, may be of the same period.

Ayyapa

82. A viragal on the bund of the tank at Abbinahole, Hiriyūr Taluk, dated 923, belongs to the reign of Ayyapa. It tells us that while the obtainer of the band of five great instruments, of the Pallava lineage, favorite of earth and fortune, ornament of the Pallava family, of one speech, Naṇṇigāśraya-śrī-Ayyapa-Nolamba was ruling the earth, and Vijarāsi was governing Kandalapa-sthala, the gāmunḍa, entering Jāgila, [fought and fell]: and that some land (specified) was granted for him.

Dilipa.

82. An epigraph at Baraka, EC, XII, Maddagiri 29, which has now been revised, refers itself to the reign of Nolambādhirāja Dilipayya, but it is too much worn to make anything out of it, the legible portion containing merely the name and the usual Nolamba titles of the king. The period of the record may be 950. Two fragmentary inscriptions at Maṇūr, Maḍaksira Taluk, which record the grant of certain lands (specified) and a flower garden by some baṭāra in the one case, and certain lands (specified) and a house by some one else in the other, may probably belong to the same reign. In the latter we are told that the writer was Jakkamman of Nandikāl, that the charity was of the forty, and that the violator of the charity would fall into the seventh hell.

THE CHOLAS.

84. An early Chōla chief, Chōla-mahārāja, has already been referred to (see para 81) when speaking of the Nolambas. There are only three or four records relating to the imperial line of Chōlas, while a few more relate to the Chōla chiefs of Niḍugal and the surrounding parts. The latter were also of the solar race and claimed to be descendants of Karikāla-Chōla and lords of Oraiyūr. Their inscriptions will also be noticed under this head.

Rājendra-Chōla.

85. An epigraph at Suttūr, EC, III, Nanjangūd 164 and 165, now correctly copied, is dated in the cyclic year Âṅgīrasa corresponding to the 21st regnal year (1032) of Rājendra-Chōla. No. 165 was found to be a continuation of No. 164. The inscription records the gift of five great musical instruments (pañcha-mahāśabḍa, named) and certain lands and dues (specified) to the temple of Īśāna-īśvaramuṇḍaiyar at Śrōtriya-grāma (Suttūr) by the mahājanas and merchants of the place according to the sacred order of the king. It is a curious mixture of Kannāḍa and Tamil, such Tamil expressions as yāṇḍu, aruḷichēy, alivu, amudu, tiruvāymoli, maṇṇara koṇḍu etc., being used in it. On the other hand, No. 161 at the same place, which belongs to the same reign and is probably of the same date, is in Tamil written in Kannāḍa characters, while No. 160 which forms the concluding portion of the same record is in Kannāḍa. A virajal at Saragūr, Nanjangūd 21, which appears to be dated in 1038 and refers to a duel between Polega of Adirāru and Peḍega of Pādariyūr, may belong to the same reign. It is dated in the year Īśvara of the middle twenty (madhya-visige) of the cycle of 60 years. The cycle is popularly divided into three visiges (vimśakas) or twenties, the first named uttama, the middle madhyama and the third adhama. In the present inscription, however, madhya is evidently a mistake for uttama, the year Īśvara being in the first visige.

Rājendra-Dēva

86. An inscription at Nagarle, Nanjangūd 157, now completely copied, is dated in the 16th year of the reign of Rājendra-Dēva (1067) and records a grant of land to the bhaḷāra who was the worshipper of the god in some temple. The gāvuṇḍa of the nāḍu and others had to give the produce of the land every year to the donee.

?Kulōttunga-Chōla III.

87. A Tamil inscription in the Doddappa temple at Hēmāvati, Maḍaksira Taluk, dated in the cyclic year Vyaya corresponding to the 2nd regnal year of Tribhuvanachchakravartī Kulōttunga-Śōla-Dēva, records a grant of land to Īśāna-jīyar in order to provide for offerings of rice for the god Mangēśvaradēvar of the city of Peruñjeru by the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara, lord of the excellent city of Oraiyūr, the Māhēśvara Tribhuvanamalla Mallidēva-Śōla(s) mahā-raḍḍaiyarahāri, chief of the dēśi, Śikkaluḍaiya-ṣeṭṭiyār. Mallidēva-Chōla is said to be ruling the kingdom from Peruñjeru (Henjeru in Kannāḍa) in Śirai-nāḍu of Nigirili-Śōla-maṇḍalam. From EC. XII, Sira 40, Pāvugaḍa 79 and other inscriptions we learn that his period was from about 1160 to 1175. Consequently the year Vyaya of the present inscription has to be taken to represent 1166, and this being his 2nd regnal year, Kulōttunga-Chōla should have begun his rule in 1165. The king mentioned here is evidently Kulōttunga-Chōla III who, according to other records, began to rule in 1178. It is not clear how this discrepancy is to be accounted for.

Virarājendra-Dēva.

88. On the outer walls of the Śiva temple at Periyapālayam, Erode Taluk, are engraved 9 Tamil inscriptions, of which one records a grant by a minister of the Unmattūr chief Nanja-Rāya-Odevar, seven, grants by Pāṇḍya kings and the remaining one, a grant by Virarājendra-Dēva. There is also a Tamil inscription at Nāchchipālayam, Palladam Taluk, which appears likewise to register a grant by a Pāṇḍya king. Barring the first epigraph which is dated 1499, all the others appear to be nearly contemporaneous, as indicated by the names of the officers and other individuals mentioned in them. None of them bears any Śaka date, only regnal years being given. In the Nāchchipālayam record, however, there occur at the end between the signatures of two officers the numerals 1234 preceded by the syllable gā, the meaning of which is not clear. One of the signatories in this inscription is also a signatory in the record of Virarājendra referred to above, and if Virarājendra is identical with Kulōttunga-Chōla III, who had that surname, the numerals cannot be taken to represent the Śaka date. The Śiva temple at Periyapālayam is called Kurakkut-taḷi or the Monkey temple in the inscriptions, probably because the god in it has the name Sugrivésvara, Sugriva being the monkey king of Kishkindhā. We may now proceed to examine the record of Virarajendra-Dēva, whom I venture to identify with Kulōttunga-Chōla III. It is dated in the 13th regnal year of Tribuvanach-chakkaravatti Kōnērinmaikondān Virarajendra-Dēva and records a grant by the king to Appan Virarajendra-Sōlach-chakravatti, one of the Siva-Brāhmaṇas of the temple of Āḷudaiya-nāyinār at Manniyūr in Vaḍa-Pariśāra-nāḍu. The grant, which consisted of certain privileges in connection with the temples of Kurakkuttali Āḷudaiya-nāyinār, the god of Mugandanūr in Vira-Sōla-valanāḍu, and of Āḷudaiya-nāyinār of Tennūr, was made at his request to the donee after the payment of 30 pon by him. He was given the following rights in the above temples — the right of worship, the enjoyment of dēvakannippēru and other income, the right of settling people in the temple precincts and levying taxes from them, management of temple lands, control over temple expenditure and enjoyment of all the privileges relating to the dēvadānas such as exemption from taxes and so forth. He was also authorised to have the grant engraved on stone and copper. The record closes with the signature of the officer Viḷuppādarāyan.

Irungōla.

89. An inscription on the pedestal of Pārśvanātha in the Pārśvanātha-basti on the Niḍugal hill, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, states that the image was caused to be made by the blessed people (i.e., the Jainas) of Bellumbatṭe, who were lay disciples of Nēmichandra-bhaṭṭāraka-dēva of the Ingulēsvara school of the Kuṇḍakunda lineage of the Pustaka-gachchha of the Dēsi-gaṇa of the Mūla-sangha. From EC, XII, Pāvugaḍa 52, of 1232, we learn that the basti was built by Gangeya's Māreya during the reign of Irungōla-Dēva who made an endowment to it.

Perumāla-Dēva.

90. A worn viragal in the prākāra or enclosure of the Nagarēsvara temple on the Niḍugal hill, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, records the death of some one in a battle during the reign of Perumāla-Dēva. This Chief's period seems to have been about 1260 (see Pāvugaḍa 14 and 47).

Gaṇēsvara.

91. An incomplete inscription on the doorway of the Sômēsvara temple on the Niḍugal hill, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, dated 1280, appears to belong to the reign of Gaṇēsvara-Dēva. It gives only the titles of the chief and the date. According to Pāvugaḍa 53 Gaṇēsvara was ruling in 1292.

THE HOYSALAS.

92. About a dozen records copied during the year relate to the Hoysala dynasty. They begin in the reign of Ballāla I and end in the reign of Ballāla III, covering a period of nearly 200 years from about A. D. 1103 to A. D. 1314. A few printed inscriptions which have now been revised will also be noticed under this head.

Ballāla I.

93. An epigraph on the pedestal of the Jina image in the basti at Haṭṇa, Tip-tur Taluk, tells us that the image was set up by Maṇiyāne-daṇḍanāyaka along with the merchants of Belgere-paṭṭana. The name of a Jaina teacher Subhachandra, who was probably the officiating priest, is also mentioned. From EC, IV, Nāga-mangala 32 and EC, VI, Chikmagalur 160 we learn that Ballāla I married in 1103 the three accomplished daughters of Maṇiyāne-daṇḍanāyaka, who is most probably identical with his namesake of the present record.

Nārasimha I.

✓ 94. An inscription on a stone pedestal in the Ranganātha temple at Huliyār, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, is a Jaina record telling us that a Jina image once stood on the pedestal. Now, however, the processional image of the temple, a Vishṇu figure, is kept on it. ✓ The epigraph, which consists of a verse and a small prose passage, states that the Jina image which once stood on the pedestal was caused to be made by Śrīyā-dēvi, consort of Sāmanta-Gōva, who was a lay disciple of Chāndrāyana-dēva. ✓ We learn from EC, XII, Chikkanāyakanhalli 21 that Sāmanta-Gōva was a feudatory of Nārasimha I and that he built the beautiful Parśvanātha-basti at Heggere (see para 32) in 1160 as a memorial, on her death, of another consort of his named Mahādēvi-nāyakiti.

Ballāla II.

95. There are three records of the reign of Ballāla II. One of them at Gijihalli. Arsikere Taluk, dated 1200, tells us that, while the obtainer of the band of five great instruments, mahāmaṇḍalēśvara, lord of the excellent city of Dvārāvati, a submarine fire to the ocean the Tuḷava army, a fire to the forest hostile claimants, an elephant to the lotus garden the Pāṇḍya family, terrible to warriors, hunter of maṇḍalīkas, plunderer of enemy's country, terrible (or a Bhīma) in war, a Cupid of the Kālī age, gratifier of the desires of the whole assemblage of bards, delighting in the gift of equality, obtainer of boons from Vāsantikādēvi, a sun in the sky of the Yādava family, crest-jewel of maṇḍalīkas, fierce in war, champion over the Malapas, adorned with these and other titles, śrīman-mahāmaṇḍalēśvara, brave capturer of Talakāḍu Kongu Nangali Gangavāḍi Noṇambavaḍi Banavase Hānungallu and Uchchangi, bhujabala-Vīra-Ganga, unassisted hero, Śanivārasiddhi, Girigurgamalla, a Rāma in firmness of character, nissankapratāpa-Hoysala-vīra-Ballāla-Dēva was ruling at Dōrasamudra, punishing the wicked and protecting the good, his servants, Bamina-gāvunḍa and others (named) of Gijeyahalli along with mēlō-like Maimetti Balleya, Maimetti Kēśava and Maimetti Hariyana granted 3 khaṇḍugas of land as an umbali to Jēḍara-Dāsimaia's son Kāṭi-gauḍa for having built a tank near Murihiṇḍi; and that similarly all the praje of Murihiṇḍi including Mācha-gauḍa and others (named) granted to him 50 kolagas of land. Out of these lands, Kāṭi-gauḍa made a grant of 10 kolagas of land each for the gods Gojjēśvara of Kōṭehālu and Gojjēśvara of Arasiyakere and 5 kolagas each for the gods Mellēśvara of Gijeyahalli and Mallikārjuna of Murihiṇḍi. Kommeya's son Maimetti Balleya's son-in-law Malleya was to maintain the grant, which was to be enjoyed by the donee's sons (named) also. In Lingāyat works such as Basava-purāṇa an account is given of a Viraśaiva teacher of the name of Jēḍara Dāsimaia. Probably he is identical with the father of the donee in the present record. Another epigraph at the same village records that during the rule at Dōrasamudra of (with titles as given above) śrīmat-Tribhuvanamalla, capturer of Kanchi, Hoysala-vīra-Ballāla-Dēva his servant Śrīranga-daṇḍādhipa, son of Maimetti . . . laḍēva and Dāsādēvi, and younger brother of Harihara-daṇḍanātha and Maimetti Kappu-Balla-chamūpa, built a tank and a temple dedicated to Śambhu-Melēśvara at Gijeyahalli. Then follow details of the lands granted by him for certain gods and to certain individuals who helped him in building the temple and tank. The engraver was the sculptor Kallōja, son of Bidōja. In case there was any deficiency in the offerings for the god Śambhu-Melēśvara, the managers of the temple Hon-jīya and Mēla-jīya were to fall into a hell full of worms. Balla-chamūpa, elder brother of the donor, is also stated to have built a tank and presented it to a Brāhman. It is worthy of notice that the lines of the inscription are numbered both at the beginning and the end. Judging from the names of the god and certain individuals, the period of this record does not appear to be far removed from that of the previous one. The third inscription at the Mallēśvara temple to the south-west of Biganēnhalli, Turuvékere Sub-Taluk, states that while (with usual titles) the king of the hill chiefs, Yādava-Nārāyaṇa, breaker of the pride of the Chōla army, warrior who put to flight Irungōla and the Pāṇḍya, warrior who cut off the head of Tayilapa, vīra-Ballāla-Dēva was ruling the earth, the mahā-pasāyita, worshipper of the feet of the god Mailāradēva, champion over titled nāyakas, Basaveya-nāyaka, along with the praje-gavudugaḷ of the 12 villages of Udigu, made a grant of land. We are then told that certain garuḍas (named) were decorated with the Hoysala fillet and received from the ruler of the country a palankeen, a parasol and sandals, and that Chavūda-gauḍa granted some lands (specified) to the Śiva temple erected at Uyyagavudanahalli by a number of garuḍas (named). A worn epigraph near a well at Hadināru, Nanjangūd Taluk, which records a grant of land at . . . vatūr to provide for worship and services in some temple by the prabhu-gāvunḍugaḷ of certain villages and mentions Amritarāśi-paṇḍita as the sthāna-pati of the temple, may also belong to the same reign. •

Nārasimha II.

96. There is only one inscription referring itself to the reign of Nārasimha II, copied at Gijihalli, Arsikere Taluk. It opens with a few verses giving an account of the Hoysala family and then records that a servant of Nārasimha II, named Sōmadēva, built the Sōmanātha temple at Kēśavapura, and that Ekkala-setti, disciple of Trilōchana-dēva, built a tank known as Ekkalasamudra. We are then told that while (with usual titles) Hoysala-vīra-Nārasinga-Dēva was ruling at Dōrasamudra, all the mahājanas of Eḷavare alias Kēśavapura granted in 1227 certain lands (specified) as a koḍaḡi to Ekkala-setti for having built Ekkalasamudra at Gījiyahalli. The lands were to be enjoyed by his descendants also. The labels below Viṣṇu figures on the outer walls of the Īśvara temple at Arsikere (see para 43) have perhaps to be assigned to the same reign, since the inscriptions EC, V, Arsikere 70 and 84, both dated 1220, lead us to the inference that the temple may have come into existence during the reign of this king. The labels, 22 in number, give the names of the various forms of Viṣṇu such as Kēśava, Nārāyaṇa, Sankar-shaṇa, Upēndra, Adhōkshaja and so forth, and are thus of some importance from an iconographical point of view.

A few more records, which appear to belong to the same reign, may also be noticed here. A fragmentary Tamil inscription at Dēbūr, EC, III, Nanjangūd 28, now revised, which appears to be dated 1221, tells us that certain individuals, assembled in the temple hall, granted some lands, as a dēvadāna, in addition to what had been formerly given by their ancestors, for the god Tiruvirāmiśuvaramudaiyār and made over the same to the managers of the temple with a promise that they would make good any deficiency in the produce of the lands. They also granted certain dues. The record closes with the sentence--Do not forget virtue; there is no guide but virtue. Another in the Lakshmikānta temple at Hedatale, Nanjangūd Taluk, which appears to bear the date 1231, records a grant of land for a flower garden by . . . gāmuṇḍa, the mahā-prabhu of . . . likolkana, for the god Nārāyaṇa-perumāl in the presence of Śrīranga-dannāyaka and the gāmuṇḍaḡal of the nāḍu. Śrīranga-dannāyaka is apparently identical with the father of Perkadidēva-dandanāyaka who is mentioned in an epigraph at Agara (last year's Report, para 101) as the great minister of Nārasimha II's son Sōmēśvara.

Nārasimha III.

97. A viragaḷ copied at Benakankere, Turuvekere Sub-Taluk, dated 1277, evidently belongs to the reign of Nārasimha III (1254-1291), though it names Ballāla as the ruling king. It tells us that while (with usual titles) the establisher of Chōla-Rāya and Pāndya-Rāja, destroyer of Magara-Rāya, Hoysaṇa-vīra-Ballāla-Dēva was ruling at Dōrasamudra, in the Śaka year 1199 corresponding to the cyclic year Īśvara, the sāvantādhīpati, a Bhīma in frontier warfare (gaḍḍiyanka-Bhīma), a bar to the frontier, protector of refugees, champion over adulterers, champion over nāyakas who keep company but prove treacherous, warrior who cut off the heads of 66 maṇḍalīkas, a whip to the back of 66 maṇḍalīkas, Hoḷkal Beṇeya-nāyaka's son Kambeya-nāyaka's son Bommeya-nāyaka, having fiercely fought and killed many during the destruction of the village, fell and attained the world of gods. The sculptor who prepared the viragaḷ was Sidōja, son of Vibōja. Another worn viragaḷ near the Bōredēva shrine at Vighnasante, Tiptūr Taluk, which is dated 1282 and gives merely a few Hoysala titles, may belong to the same reign. The same is probably the case with the labels found on the outer walls of the Chemakēśava temple at Aralaguppe (see para 33), which name a sculptor Honōja, who had most to do with the ornamentation of the structure which appears to have been erected about the middle of the 13th century.

Ballāla III.

98. Three inscriptions copied during the year refer themselves to the reign of Ballāla III. One of them, a Tamil epigraph at Hedatale, EC, III, Nanjangūd 95, now revised, records that while the unassisted hero, conqueror of the Pāndya, Poysala-pratāpa-vīra-Vallāla-Dēvar was ruling the earth, Vīma-gāmuṇḍan, son of . . . ta-gāmuṇḍan, who was the son of Vikka-gāmuṇḍan, granted certain lands (specified) in 1297 to provide for offerings of rice for the god Arulālap-perumāl. Another at Dabbeḡaṭṭa, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, dated 1292, tells us that the mahāsāmantā Māchaya, washing the feet of the supporter of the Lakulāgama-saṃaya, Padmarāsi-pāṇḍita, granted lands to provide for offerings, enjoyments and perpetual lamps for the gods Hoysaṇēśvara, Brahmēśvara and Māchēśvara, and for temple repairs. A worn viragaḷ at the same place, also dated 1292, records the death of some individual and the setting up of the stone by his relative Masana-setti. Another record at Hedatale, EC, III, Nanjangūd 93, dated 1314, which has now been completely copied, states that during the rule of Ballāla-Dēva, with the consent of the great minister Perumāludēva-dannāyaka's son Mādhava-dannāyaka, the mahā-radḍabyarahāri Sinka-setti's son Sindi-setti, having purchased a portion of the flower garden of the god Kēsavanātha of Edatale from the temple Śrivaishnavas and converted it into wet land by removing earth, made over the same to them with the condition that they should provide an offering of 1 balla of rice every day for the god for as long as the sun and moon last. It was also stipulated that the prasāda of 1 māna of rice due to him out of the offering was to be handed over to his partner in this charitable work, Tannantūla-dāsar, and his descendants. Mādhava-dannāyaka, mentioned in this record, was the Hoysala viceroy who governed Padināḷku-nāḍu with the seat of his government at Terakanāmbi, Gundlupet Taluk (see Report for 1907, para 24).

To the same reign may belong a few more viragals copied during the year. One of them at Settīhalli, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, is half immersed in water, the portion visible giving only the titles of the king. Another at Bēdarhalli of the same Taluk says that Māraya fell in some battle and that his son set up the stone. Two more at Barakanhālu of the same Taluk, which appear to be dated in 1301, record that Bauma-gavuda's sons Kālayya and Rāmayya, and . . . la-gavuda, having rescued the cattle, fell; whereupon celestial nymphs carried them away to heaven and placed them on the throne of the gods.

THE PANDYAS.

99. The inscriptions relating to the Pāṇḍya kings have already been referred to in para 83 above. They are 8 in number, all in Tamil, 7 engraved on the outer walls of the Siva temple at Periyapālayam, Erode Taluk, and 1 at Nāchchipālayam, Palladam Taluk. Of these, 2 refer themselves to the reign of Nambillai Sundara-Pāṇḍya, both being dated in the 22nd regnal year; 3 to the reign of Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōṇērinnaiḱonḍān Sundara-Pāṇḍya, two being dated in the 24th regnal year, the figure of the regnal year being defaced in the 3rd; 1 to the reign of Sundara-Pāṇḍya, being dated in the 3rd regnal year; 1 to the reign of Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōṇērinnaiḱonḍān Vira-Pāṇḍya, being dated in the 8th regnal year; and 1 to the reign of Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōṇērinnaiḱonḍān without mention of any regnal year. With the exception of the record of Vira-Pāṇḍya, all the others probably refer to one and same king; and this surmise derives some support from the fact that they are nearly synchronous as evidenced by the mention of the same individuals in them. For instance, the Śiva-Brāhmaṇa Virarājendra-Śōḷa-śakkaravarti who, as we saw (para 88), received a grant from Virarājendra, figures in no less than 6 of these records: the officer Viḷuppādarāyan, whom we found as a signatory in the record of Virarājendra (para 88), is also a signatory in 3 of these; and the officer Kālingarāyan in 4. None of these bears a Śaka date, and in case the figures 1234 occurring at the end of one of them represents the Śaka year, of which I am not sure, the date of that record would be A. D. 1311. But in that case Virarājendra cannot be identified with Kulōttunga-Chōḷa III, who began to rule in 1178. A Kālingarāyan is mentioned as an officer of Māravarma Kulasēkhara I (Madras Epigraphical Report for 1910, page 99) and another, of Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōṇērinnaiḱonḍān (Ibid. for 1916, page 125); but it is possible that there were several individuals of the same name.

Śundara-Pāṇḍya.

100. The inscription of this king states that in the 3rd year of the reign of Sundara-Pāṇḍya-Dēva Pāḷainallūr-udaiyan.....nāyakan Settīyālvān alias Sēramān Tōḷan, one of the? cloth-merchants residing in the southern street of the temple precincts, deposited 1 achchu for the maintenance of a twilight lamp to be burned before Vaḍugappillaiyār in the temple of Kurakkuttali-āḷudaiyār (see para 88), the god of Mugandanūr in Vira-Śōḷa-vaḷanāḍu, with the Siva-Brāhmaṇa of the temple Appan Virarājendira-Śōḷach-chakkaravatti of the Vāchya-gōtra. The record closes with the sentence that the charity is placed under the protection of the Māhēśvaras. Two more records name the king Nambillai Sundara-Pāṇḍya. As these are supposed to register the order of Chāṇḍēśvara, the expression nambillai, "our-son", being his words, the king so named may not be different from the one of the other record. Both are dated in the 22nd regnal year and open thus:—Chāṇḍēś-vara's order. In the sea-girt earth ponder ye over the acts of? Kaṇḍēśvara; he did charity formerly. I will unhesitatingly place on my head the feet of him who maintains another's charity. The gracious order of Ādi-Chaṇḍēśvara. One of them then proceeds to record the duties and rights of the village and village officers of Sidakkarachchi in Vāvaraikkara-nāḍu in regard to their hamlet Sūralūr alias Sundara-Pāṇḍiya-nallūr granted by Sundara-Pāṇḍiya-Dēva for the god Kurakkuttali-nāyinār. It was ordered that they should be the cultivators of the hamlet which was to be looked upon as a dēvadāna inclusive of the cultivators; that they should give a half share of the produce of the lands cultivated by them and a half share of the amount of certain taxes (a good number named) levied by them; that the managers among them should receive 1 kalam of paddy each and enjoy exemption from certain taxes (named); that 3 mā of tax-free land should be set apart for the god of the hamlet and 6 mā for the maḍam of Tiruveṅkāvuḍaiyār alias Kurakkuttali-mudaliyār in the temple; that they should build dams, dig channels and create all other facilities for irrigation; and that their property should be capable of being inherited even by women. Then follow the signatures of Ādi-Chaṇḍēśvara and the accountant (śrīkaraṇattān). Among the taxes mentioned in the record are offachchu, ārāṭchi, elavai, uḡavai, vāsal-viniyōgam, ōlaichchambaḍam, śandivigrahappēru, uppāyam, taṭṭoli-pāṭṭam, neyyennai-kāṇam and anijiduvānavari. The other inscription records the duties and rights of the fisherman Piḷḷaiyān of Vellalūr in Pērūr-nāḍu in regard to the tax-free temple property of the god Kurakkuttali-āḷudaiya-nāyanār of Sūralūr alias Sundara-Pāṇḍiya-nallūr in Vāvaraikkara-nāḍu. It was ordered that he should look after the dam and the channel, see that the water flows to the pond without running to waste, and, in case there was any deficiency of water in the dam and pond, inform the temple authorities and the villagers of this and with the help of the unpaid labourers (veṭṭiyāl) of the village raise the dam and take care of it; that he should receive for this work 1 mā of tax-free land (specified), 1 tāṇi and 4 nall of paddy from the cultivated lands of the village and a bundle of unthrashed paddy containing about a kuṇṇi from.....; that he should supply the temple authorities with 1 padi of kaṇi (? fish) every day; that he should pay annually a channel tax (vāḡkkāl-pāṭṭam) of 6 paṇam; that in place of pāṣip-pāṭṭam he should defray the expenses of some festival in the temple; and that, in case a large quantity of fish was obtained when removing silt from the pond, he should supply kaṇi in addition to the stipulated quantity. The grant was to be enjoyed by him and his descendants for as long as the sun and moon last. He was also permitted to have it engraved on stone and copper. The record closes with the signatures of the accountant and Virarājendra-Śōḷach-chakkaravatti.

Tribhuvanachakravartī Kōṇērinmaikōṇḍān Sundara-Pāṇḍya.

101. Though named with these titles, the king intended is in all probability the same as the one noticed in the previous para. There are three records mentioning the king with these titles, of which two are dated in the 24th regnal year, the figure in the third being effaced. All of them record grants by the king to the authorities of the temple of Kurakkuttali-āḷudaiya-nāyanār at Mugandanūr in Vira-Śōḷa-vaḷanāḍu to provide for (1) offerings of rice, festivals, temple repairs and condiments in one of them, (2) offerings of rice, sandal and other requirements in the second, and (3) festivals, offerings of rice and the necessary condiments for the god (name gone) set up in the temple in the king's name and temple repairs in the third, the grants consisting respectively of (1) a ruined pond in Nallāru to the west of the temple environs together with the lands irrigated by it with exemption from all kinds of taxes, (2) all the lands within the four boundaries of the ruined village Sūralūr situated on the southern bank in Vāvaraikkara-nāḍu with exemption from all taxes (many named), and (3) a large ruined pond to the east of Sūralūr together with the lands irrigated by it. In every case the donees are authorised to have the grants engraved on stone and copper, and the expenditure of all the three items of income was to be under the control of Virarājendra-Śōḷa-śakkaravatti. The first and third epigraphs bear the signatures of both Viḷuppādarāyan and Kālingarāyan, but the second, only that of Kālingarāyan, though it is likely that the defaced portion preceding this may have had that signature also. All the records have at the end the sentence—This charity is placed under the protection of all Māhēśvaras, but the first has, besides, this imprecatory sentence: He who violates this shall be devoid of offspring for seven generations.

Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōnerinmaikōṇḍān Vira-Pāṇḍya.

102. The inscription of this king records that in his 8th regnal year he granted to the authorities of the temple of Kurakkuttali-āḷudaiya-nāyanār at Mugandanūr in Vira-Śōḷa-vaṇaṇḍu all the lands excluding former dēvadānas within the four boundaries of the ruined village Perumbālaikkarai in Valupurakkara-nāḍu together with all taxes (named) in order to provide for the special festival instituted in his name and for offerings of rice, condiments and temple repairs. Then follow details of the boundaries of the village. The village was to be named Śundara-Pāṇḍiya-nallūr and settled with inhabitants, and the expenditure of the income from it had to be, as stated in the other records (see previous para), under the control of Virarājendira-Śōḷach-chakravarti. Some of the taxes mentioned in the record are iṇai-puravu, śirṟāyam, kuḍippaṇam, tiruchchūla-vari, iṇaikkānam, pūkānam, iṇai-eṇṇai and teṇḍakurram. The charity was placed under the protection of all Māhēśvaras.

Tribhuvanachakravarti Kōnerinmaikōṇḍān.

103. The epigraph at Nāchchipāḷayam (see para 99) mentions the king by these titles without giving any specific name. But its contents are mostly identical with those of the inscription of Vira-Pāṇḍya noticed in the previous para, though it does not give any regnal year. The grant was made to the authorities of the same temple to provide for temple repairs and for offerings of rice and the necessary condiments for the same god, only the special festival instituted in the king's name is not mentioned. It consisted of all the lands excluding former dēvadānas and paḷḷichchandam (land given to a Jaina basti) within the four boundaries of the ruined village Perumbūlainattam in Valippugārnāḍu together with all taxes (named). Though there is a slight difference in the spelling, the village granted appears to be the same as that named in the previous para. As in the other record, the village was to be named Śundara-Pāṇḍiya-nallūr and settled with inhabitants. Then follow the signatures of Kālingarāyan, Kachchayarāyan and Viḷuppādarāyan, and the imprecatory sentence—He who destroys this shall be devoid of offspring for seven generations. As stated in para 88, between the signatures of Kachchayarāyan and Viḷuppādarāyan occur the numerals 1234 preceded by the syllable yū. I am not sure whether these are intended to represent the Śaka date.

VIJAYANAGAR.

104. There are about 15 inscriptions of the Vijayanagar period, beginning in the reign of Harihara II and ending in the reign of Śrī-Ranga-Rāya II. They cover a period of nearly 280 years from 1379 to 1664. Six of the records are copper plate inscriptions: one of Harihara II, one of Vira-Narasimha, one of Krishṇa-Dēva-Rāya, two of Venkaṭapati-Rāya I and one of Venkaṭapati-Rāya II. The grant of Harihara II, consisting of nine plates and 393 lines, is the longest record copied during the year. An inscription of Śrī-Ranga-Rāya II is of interest as it refers to the ordeal of dipping the hand in boiling ghee for the settlement of a dispute between two parties.

Harihara II.

105. The plates of Harihara, referred to in the previous para, were received for examination from Mr. V. B. Alur, B.A., L.L.B., of Dharwar. A view of the nine plates with ring and seal is given on Plate X. These plates were found on examination to be the Dambal plates dealt with by Dr. Fleet in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, XII, 338-342 and 346-380, where a transcript and a translation of the inscription are given with an introductory note. I shall therefore content myself with giving a brief account of the record. Dr. Fleet says that some of the plates are numbered; but I find that every one of them is numbered. After obeisance to Gaṇapati and invocation of Śaṃbhu, the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, Gaṇapati and Virūpāksha in separate verses, the inscription gives the genealogy of Harihara II thus:—In the race of Yadu arose Sangama. He performed the 16 great gifts in Rāmēśvaram and other holy places. Quickly damming the Kāvēri when in full flood, he crossed over and seizing the enemy alive, took possession of his Tancha kingdom and of the city Śrīrangapaṭṭaṇa. He conquered Chēra, Chōḷa and Pāṇḍya, together with the lord of Madhurā Mānabhūsha, the Turushka and the Gajapati king. His sons were Harihara and Bukka. After Harihara Bukka came to the throne. His son was Harihara, a firm adherent of the itihāsas, purāṇas and dharma-śāstra and a devoted maintainer of the four castes and religious orders. Then the inscription records that in the Śaka year 1301 corresponding to the cyclic year Siddhārtha (A. D. 1379), with the permission of the guru Kriyāśakti-mūrti, the king divided the district of Gadag (Kratupura), comprising 66 villages, into three equal shares, and, retaining one share as the king's portion and giving the second share for the gods Tryambakēśa and Viranārāyaṇa of Gadag, bestowed the third share, consisting of 22 villages, as an agrahāra on a number of learned Brahmans of various śākhās, gōtras and sūtras. Then follow details of the donees and their shares, and the grant closes with the signature of the king—Śri-Virūpāksha—engraved in Kannada characters.

106. This inscription is of interest in several ways. It is a good specimen of Sanskrit composition, containing as it does well composed verses in a variety of metres. The feat of damming the Kāvēri, seizing the enemy alive and taking possession of the Tancha-rājya and Śrirangapaṭṭaṇa, which is generally attributed to Narasa in the later records of the dynasty, is ascribed here to Sangama, the first king of the line. I venture to think that Tancha here, which is generally divided into tan and cha construing tan with śatrum in another part of the verse, stands for Tañjai or Tanjore. I made this suggestion so far back as 1894 to Dr Hultzsch who wrote in reply thus—"I had thought hitherto that the exigencies of the metre had prompted the composer to place the cha before rājyam tadiyam, and I had connected tan with śatrum. But your suggestion solves the difficulty in an admirable manner, and I have not the slightest doubt now that Tancha is meant for Tañjai or Tañjā-ūr, i.e., Tanjore." Among the donees, Sōmabhaṭṭa, Śrirangabhaṭṭa and Hanūmān are mentioned as great poets; Virūpāksha and Jyōtīśa-bhaṭṭa as astrologers; Hari as the author of Jyōtirvidābhōga; Nṛsiṃha as versed in the signification of Sāma-svara; Venkaṭa as capable of expounding śāstra and his own Vēda letter by letter; Murāri as competent to give instruction in two śāstras; and Kāśinātha as having crossed over to the other shore of the ocean of śāstras. Two of the names, Śringēri-bhaṭṭa and Vidyāśankara-bhaṭṭa, are suggestive of the regard in which that holy place and its guru were held by the people. Among the gōtras of the donees may be mentioned as worthy of notice Vāmadēva, Uchathya, Agastya, Bida, Viṣṇuvṛiddha, Pautināsha, Kapi, Śālankāyana, Yāska, Rēbha, Bṛihaduktha, Aghamarshaṇa, Rauhina, Āgnivēśya, Lauhitāksha, Dairghatamasa, Gāvishṭhara and Painga. Kriyāśakti, with whose permission the grant was made, was a great Śaiva teacher who is mentioned in several inscriptions as the guru of Harihara II (see EC. V, Chennarāyapaṭṇa 256 and my Report for 1912, para 99). He was also the guru of Mādhava-mantri, governor of Banavase under Bukka I and Harihara II and author of a commentary on the Sūtasamhitā.

Dēva-Rāya I.

107. There are two records of the reign of Dēva-Rāya I. One of them at Hampasandra, Gōribidnūr Taluk, dated 1409, tells us that in the name of Chavudārasa-oḍeya's son Narasimhadēva-oḍeya, minister of the Penagoṇḍe kingdom of the mahārājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara śrī-vīra-pratāpa-Dēva-Rāya-mahārāya, his servant, Singarasa's son Rāmarasa of Bīmasandra, built a new sluice in the west to the tank at Hampasamudra, which was capable of irrigating 50 khaṇḍagas of land. The merit of having made the sluice belongs to Narasimhadēva-oḍeya for as long as the son and moon last. The other inscription at the Hanumantarāya temple on the hill at Pāvugaḍa states that in the year Pārthiva Gōpaṇṇa built the fort. From EC, XI, Hiriyūr 28, of 1410, we learn that Gōpa was the governor of Niḍugal-durga, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, under Dēva-Rāya I. So, the year Pārthiva of the present record stands for A. D. 1405, and it is interesting to note that the fort on the Pāvugaḍa hill was built so far back as 1405 during the early Vijayanagar period.

Sāluva Narasiṅga II or Immaḍi Narasiṅga.

108. A worn epigraph behind the Ranganātha temple at Pankajanhalli, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, dated 1497, belongs to this king of the second Vijayanagar dynasty properly so called. It records a grant by Kencha, the valiant arm of Narasa-Nāyaka, who was the son (komāra) of the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara, mēdanimiśara-gaṇḍa Kaṭāri-Sāluva Narasinga-Rāya-mahārāya. Narasa-Nāyaka is the second usurper of the Vijayanagar throne and the father of Vira-Narasimha and Krishna-Dēva-Rāya.

Vira-Narasimha.

109. A copper plate inscription of Vira-Narasimha (Plate XIV) was received from the Jōdidār of Sivanagere, Maddagiri Taluk. It consists of 3 plates, each measuring 12" by 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ ", and is dated in 1506, the writing being in Nāgari characters. After invocation of Gaṇapati, the record gives the Purāṇic genealogy from the Moon to Turvasu and then proceeds to give the pedigree of Vira-Narasimha thus:— In the line of Turvasu arose Timma, husband of Dēvaki; his son was Śvara, husband of Bukkamā; his son was Narasa—his feat of damming the Kāvēri etc., (see para 106), his subjugation of the Chēra and other kings and his great gifts at Rāmēśvaram and other holy places are mentioned; his sons by Tippāji and Nāgalā were Vira-Nṛsimha and Krishna-Rāya. King Vira-Narasimha made various gifts to the temples at Chidambaram and other holy places. Then the inscription records that on Monday, the Śivarātri day in the dark fortnight of Māgha of the year Krōdhana corresponding to the Śaka year 1427, in the presence of the god Virūpāksha on the bank of the Tungabhadra adorned with Hēmakūṭa, the king granted, as a sarvamāṇya, with all the usual rights, the village Sivanagari, situated in the Bhasmāṅgisaila-sthala of the Haratipura district in the Ghana-sailapuri kingdom, giving it another name Narasimhapura after himself, to Sarvēśvarārādhyā of the Harita-gōtra, Āpastamba-sūtra and Yajus-śākhā, son of Channi-bhaṭṭa and grandson of the Arādhyā Linga-bhaṭṭa. Then follow the boundaries of the village both in Sanskrit and Kannaḍa. The composer of the grant was Nṛsimha and the engraver Rāma.

Krishna-Dēva-Rāya.

110. There are three records of the reign of this king. One of them, dated 1523, is a copy of a copper plate inscription found in a palm leaf manuscript in the possession of Pandit A. Srinivasarangachar of the Archaeological office. Its contents are identical with those of the grant noticed in the previous para down to Vira-Narasimha. On his death Krishna-Rāya came to the throne. After describing his glory, valour and liberality, the inscription states that on Tuesday the 6th lunar day of the dark fortnight of Pausa in the year Svabhānu corresponding to the Śaka year denoted by the chronogram bhāvābhaya (1444), on the bank of the Krishna, the king granted to Venkaṭatāyārya of the Śaṭhamarsha-gōtra, Āpastamba-sūtra and Yajus-śākhā, son of Ahōbalāchārya and grandson of Śrīrangadēsika, a sāsana to the effect that he was to receive the first tirtha and prasāda in the Vishṇu temples in Vijayanagara, Ghanādri and all the 77 durgas subordinate to them such as Chandragiri-durga and Guttigiri-durga, in all the cities to the east and west of Vijayanagara as far as the sea, in all the durgas to the north and south as far as Madhurā, and in all holy places such as Kānchi, Śrīsaila and Khādri excepting Śrīranga, Ahōbala and Ghatikagiri; that he was to be shown first honors in the assemblies of Śrīvaiśnavas; and that he was authorised to make enquiries into the conduct of all the castes owing allegiance to Rāmānuja and to punish the delinquents in regard to religious and social matters. After a few usual final verses the record closes with the signature Śrī-Virūpāksha of the king. A note in Telugu states that the original has a boar seal. The donee is described as the establisher of the Vēdic path, as a proficient in both the Vēdāntas (Sanskrit and Tamiḷ), as a rich man possessed of palankeens and other paraphernalia, and as having performed the Sōma sacrifice with liberal gifts of money, cows, cloths and land. Another inscription in front of the Mallikārjuna temple at Pankajanhalli, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, dated 1529, tells us that while the mahārājādhirāja rāja-parainēśvara śrī-vira-pratāpa śrī-vira-Krishna-Rāya-mahārāya was ruling the earth, on the holy occasion of Śivarātri, for the prosperity of the king, Chennai-setti of Bānavādi granted, in the presence of the god Virūpāksha of Pampākhētra, with all the usual rights, the village Pankajanhalli for the god Mallikārjuna of the village, in order to provide for offerings of rice, perpetual lamps, decorations, enjoyments and festivals for the god. Reference is also made to the setting up of this inscription. He who violated the grant was to be deemed as a traitor to the feet of the king. A sentence at the end adds that Chikana, a servant of Malappana of Yalabaragi, built the kaṭṭe or pond near the temple. Another epigraph at Dévanûr, EC, III, Nanjangûd 124, dated 1517, which has now been revised, records a grant of land, as a koḍage, to the svâmi of the Lingayat maṭha at Suttûr by Sâluva-Gôvindarâja. Though the king is not named here, we know from other records (see last year's Report, para 112) that Sâluva-Gôvindarâja was a minister of Krishna-Dêva-Râya. Two fragmentary inscriptions at Nanjangûd, Nos. 19 and 20, of 1521 and 1514, now revised, which refer to the svâmis of the Suttûr maṭha and record grants for the god Sangamêśvara, may belong to the same reign. From another record (see Report for 1913, para 117, of 1514, we learn that the Sangamêśvara temple was built by Bhaṇḍârî Basavappa-oḍeya, disciple of Parvata-oḍeyar of the Suttûr maṭha, at the sangama or confluence of Kapilâ and Kaundini.

Achyuta-Râya.

111. An inscription at the Ranganâtha temple of the bêchirâkh village, Ranga-pura, Pâvugaḍa Taluk, dated in 1541, states that by order of the king the minister Râma-bhaṭṭa's younger brother Yellappayya granted with a copper śâsana the tank Kâtagondanahâli and the village Gôpagondanahâli surnamed Venkatasamudra to Yellappayya's son Dhvaja-Timmaṇa-dâsa for conducting every year the flag service (dhvajada sêre) and the jâtre of the god Tiruvengalanâtha. The agent for the charities of Yellappayya, Hebbârûva-upâdhyâya of Rodda, who was the superintendent (pârûpatya-karta) of the sime, was to see that the charity was carried on properly. Two more records copied during the year may also be assigned to the same reign. One of them in the Sômêśvara temple at Suttûr, Nanjangûd Taluk, which appears to be dated 1530, records an agreement between Bhadrappa, agent for the affairs of the mahâmaṇḍalêśvara Râma-Râja-Tirumala-Râjayyadêva-mahâarasu, and the svâmis of the maṭha at Suttûr to the effect that the annual rental of 40 varahas which they had been paying on the lands at Suttûr belonging to the god Sômêśvara should thenceforward be paid to the temple treasury. The rental is called śrôtriyada guttiqe and the agreement śrôtriyada kattu-paṭṭe (stone roll of assessment). The other, a worn epigraph at Dodda-Kaulande of the same Taluk, which seems to be dated in 1538, records the grant of Hiriya Kavilandi as a sarvamânya to some one by the minister Sâluva Gôvindarâja (see previous para).

Sadâśiva.

112. An inscription in the Lakshmîkânta temple at Tumkûr, EC, (XII) Tumkûr 4, now revised, records a grant of land to provide for offerings of rice, etc., for the god Prasanna-Tiruvengalanâtha of Tumkûr by the mahâmaṇḍalêśvara Jagannâthayadêva-mahârâju in 1560 during the rule of Sadâśiva-Râya.

Venkaṭapati-Râya I.

113. Two copper plate inscriptions of this king were received from Shanbog Siddaramaiya of Maskal, Hiriya Taluk. One of these is the original of EC, XI, Hiriya 88, which is printed from a hand copy supplied by the villagers. The other, dated 1589, records a grant by the mahâmaṇḍalêśvara śrî-vîra-pratâpa śrî-vîra-Venkaṭapati-Râya to Tippiarasaya's (son) Viraya of Hiriya. The grant consisted of certain rent-free lands (specified) in various places (named) and of certain dues. The donee was made the senabhôga or accountant for 185 villages situated in 11 sthalas (named) which belonged to Kenchanṇa-nâyaka of Hiriya. The inscription opens with a verse which is rarely met with in other records. It may be rendered thus—O Vibhishana! your sovereignty will last as long as the sun, the moon and the earth endure, and as long as the story of Râma is current in the world. The grant is named kâṇāchiya śâsana, kâṇāchi being a corruption of the Tamil word kāṇiy-āṭchi which means proprietorship of land. Both the sets consist of long thin plates somewhat resembling palm leaves.

Râma-Dêva-Râya.

114. An epigraph at Jôgihalli, EC, XII, Chikkanâyakanhalli 1, dated 1623, which has now been revised, tells us that while śrî-vîra-Râma-Dêva-Râya was ruling the earth at Ghanagirinagara and Mudiappa-Nâyakêndra was ruling at Chikkanâyakanahalli in Hoysala-sime to the west of Ghanagiri-nagara, the latter's right arm, worshipper of Vîra-Mâhêśvaras, Śilavanta Daḷavâyi Paramappa had a maṭha, a tank and a garden made and granted them to the virtuous possessor of pure Śivâchâra, one of the mahâ-mahattu of heaven and earth, Nandîśvara-svâmi. The virtuous kings who carry on this charity without destroying it Mahâdêva will take under his protection and bestow upon them all enjoyments including wealth.

gold, vehicles and offspring. The sinners who without carrying it on destroy it or remove the inscription stone or deface the writing on it or confiscate the garden, matha and tank, shall be outcastes both in this world and the next. They shall rot in the Raurava hell for as long as the sun and moon last. This matha is intended solely for virtuous Mâhêśvaras who offer everything to Śiva, and in case any rogues and knaves who do not do so happen to reside in the matha, Vira-Mâhêśvaras, oḍeyas and devotees must on enquiry drive them out and install good men. Here the record ends. Then follows another inscription, dated 1626, which registers the grant of the village Bhôgasamudra to the matha by Mudiappa-Nâyaka. It bears the signature of Mudiappa-Nâyaka's (son) Bhayirappa-Nâyaka. At the top of the stone is engraved this sentence—Only Vira-Mâhêśvaras must reside in the virakta-matha of Daḷavâyi Śilavanta Paramappa. It would be to the immense advantage of the Archæological Department if the above imprecatory sentence could deter people from removing or defacing inscribed stones.

Venkaṭapati-Râya II.

115. A copper plate inscription in the possession of Venkannachar at Chikkanâyakanhalli belongs to the reign of this king. It consists of only one plate measuring 9" by 6", and bears the date 1639. After invocation of Sambhu and the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, the inscription records that while (with usual titles) Venkaṭapati-Dêva-mahârâya was ruling the earth at Penugonḍe, Sâli-Nâyaka's (son) Bhairappa-Nâyaka of the Gôvala-gôtra, to whom the king had favoured by a śâsana, for his office of umara-nâyaka, Erekaṭṭe in Hoysala-dêsa, granted, with all the usual rights, certain lands (specified) at Kandikere situated in Âraga-venṭeya of Magadhadêsa to Lakshmanâchârya of the Vârdhi-sagôtra, Âpasthamba-sûtra and Yajuś-śâkhâ, son of Venkaṭa-bhaṭṭa and grandson of Ananta-bhaṭṭa. The signature of the donor—Śri-Râmêśvara—occurs at the end.

Śri-Ranga-Râya II.

116. An epigraph in front of the Ranganâtha temple at Abbinahole, Hiriyûr Taluk, dated 1664, refers itself to the reign of this king and gives an interesting account of the settlement of a dispute about the office of Shanbog by recourse to the ordeal of dipping the hand in boiling ghee. It records that while (with usual titles) śri-vira-Śri-Ranga-Dêva-mahârâya was ruling the earth at Bêlûr and the Harati chief the mahâmaṇḍalêśvara Sammetaraṇa Sarajarâyapa-râjayya was ruling at Ratnagiri-durga, the śānabāgas of Dammalalu, Kambaya's son Muduranga and four others (named), with the consent of their wives, sons, agnates, heirs and the sāvantas of four villages, granted to the śānabāgas of Guḍa-Abbinahole-sthala belonging to Râyadurgavenṭhe of Dêvana-Sireha-Tâvarigere-râṣṭra, namely, Gauranna's son Sadâśivayya and others (four named), a jayarêkhe-patrike or certificate of victory as follows:—When we represented to the assembly, consisting of the gavudās, śānabāgas, settis and paṭṭaṇasvâmis of Agali, Maduvidi, Raṇṭavâlalu, Harati, Hulikunte, Mûruvâgilu, Sivara, Henjere and other surrounding villages, that the kāṇāchi (see para 113) pertaining to the office of Shanbog of Guḍa-sthala belonged to us, judgment was pronounced in your favor. Declining to abide by the decision of the assembly, we proposed to settle the dispute by the ordeal of dipping the hand in boiling ghee in the presence of the goddess Ellamma of Kôḍi-halli. Accordingly, by order of the chief, ghee was sent for by Sidapa-dêvaru of Harati and others (named), boiled and placed before us, and when we put our hand into it, saying "this kāṇāchi is ours", the hand was burnt and we thus lost our case, while you won yours by escaping injury. We therefore give you this jayarêkhe. Justice being on your side, may you enjoy the office of Shanbog for as long as the sun and moon last. Then follow names of witnesses. By consent of both parties this was written by Kambaya's son Mudurangaya, śānabāga of Dammalalu. Then follow signatures of Sidapa-dêva of Harati and several others. The engraver was Taminanna's son Ayyana of Maduvidi.

Two sanads copied during the year, which open with an acknowledgment of Śri-Ranga-Râya's overlordship may also be noticed here. One of them in the possession of Nagalingachari at Koratigere, dated in Śrimukha corresponding to the Śaka year 1225, states that in a battle that took place at Musavanakallu between the chief of Miḍigêsi and the chief of Koratigere, Raṇabaire-gauḍa of the chaturtha-gôtra, the latter's generals Bachche-gauḍa, Baire-gauḍa, Venkaṭe-gauḍa, Range-gauḍa, Sanjiva-gauḍa and Râme-gauḍa fought and fell; that another general, Sonṇe-gauḍa, resolved upon retrieving the disaster, marched against the chief, seized him at Parigi, cut off his head, and fixing it on his flag, brought it to his master; and that Ranabaire-gaṇḍa, being highly pleased with the prowess of Sonne-gaṇḍa, granted him certain lands (specified) as a jāgīr. The signature of the chief comes at the end. According to the chronicle of the Midigēśi chiefs, the chief who was killed by Sonne-gaṇḍa was Mummāḍi Chikkappa-Gaṇḍa whose period was about the beginning of the 17th century. The date given in the record is clearly wrong. Srimukha does not correspond to Śaka 1225, but to 1256; the date intended is probably A.D. 1633. The other sanad in the possession of Patel Doddarange-gaṇḍa of Maddagiri is dated in Akshaya corresponding to the Śaka year 1436 and records the grant of gaṇḍike or the office of gaṇḍa of Maddagiri and Kambadakôte to Range-gaṇḍa and Rāme-gaṇḍa by the mahānāḍu-prabhu Hire-Virappa-Gaṇḍa's grandson Kāla-Chikkappa-Gaṇḍa. The grant was made according to the order received from Śri-Ranga-Rāya of Vijayanagara. The record bears the signatures of the chief, the minister Bhāskara-panta, the general Harinarasaiya and the munshi Ranganāthaiya. Here too the date is wrong. Śaka 1436 does not correspond to Akshaya, but to Srimukha. The date intended is probably A.D. 1687. In many of these records the overlordship of some king given in the opening portion has no meaning; it has been merely taken from the "office copy" without regard to the king ruling at the time. There are numerous Hoysala inscriptions in the Tumkur District which open with an acknowledgment of Chālukya suzerainty long after the power of that dynasty had ceased.

HARATI.

117. There is only one record relating to the Harati chiefs. One of the chiefs named Sarajarāyapa-rājayya was referred to in the previous para when speaking of the Vijayanagar king Śri-Ranga-Rāya II. This inscription, engraved on the lamp-pillar in front of the ruined Basava shrine on the summit of Nidugal-durga, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, states that the pillar was set up by Chikauve and Basavauve, consorts of the mahānāyākāchārya Vira-Hoṭṭanna-Nāyaka of Harati, son of Chinna-māmbā and Hoṭṭanna-Nāyaka, who was the son of Timmaṇṇa-Nāyaka, who was again the son of Hoṭṭanna-Nāyaka. It is not dated; but as we learn from EC, XII, Pāvugaḍa 42 that the chief Vira-Hoṭṭenna-Nāyaka built this Basava shrine in 1653, the period of the present record may be about the same.

NIDUGAL.

118. An inscription on the door-lintel of the Ranganātha temple on Pailubande-gudda, Madaksira Taluk, dated in the year Pārthiva, tells us that Rāmaṇṇa, the secretary or clerk (rāyasa) of the mahānāyākāchārya Immaḍi Timmaṇṇa-Nāyaka-ayya of Nidugal, built the front ankana of the yāyasaḷe of the god Ranganātha of Peyalakonda. EC, XII, Sira 31 records a grant for the same god by the above chief in 1556. So, Pārthiva of the present epigraph may be taken to represent 1586.

UMMATTUR.

119. There are 5 records relating to the chiefs of Ummattūr, which range in date from 1488 to 1499. One of them is a Tamil epigraph at Periyapālayam, Erode Taluk. The chiefs represented are Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar (1482-1495) and Vira-Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar (1497-1504).

Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar.

120. There are four records of this chief. One of them at Viradēvanpura, Nanjangūḍ Taluk, dated 1488, records the grant of Dēvarāyapura, a hamlet of Bādanevālu in Tagaḍūr-sthala, as a sarvamānya, by the hunter of elephants, Nanja-Rāya, to provide for offerings of rice, decorations and enjoyments for the greatest of the gods, Śrikanṭhadēva of Nanjalugūḍu. Then follow the boundaries of the hamlet. The name of a minister Dēvarājaya occurs at the end. Another at Nērale, EC, III, Nanjangūḍ 102, dated 1492, now revised, tells us that by order of the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara śri-vira-Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar his valiant arm Dēvarāya-oḍeyar granted some lands (specified), exempt from taxes, to Nanjapayya, Nanjunḍa-ayya and other śilavantas (Lingāyats) of Nīrili. Another at the same place, Nanjangūḍ 100, dated 1495, which has also been revised, records that Parvatayya, son of Dēvarāya who was the great house minister of the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara, javādikolāhala, pēsāli-Hanuma, a brave in war with kings, gēnānka-chakrēśvara, hunter of elephants, lord of the Hoysala kingdom, Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar of Ummat-tūr, granted certain lands (specified) to provide for the feeding of five oḍeyas (Lingāyat gurus) resembling Virayya-dēvaru of Nirili. A third at the same place, Nanjangūd 101, of the same date, which has likewise been revised, records a grant of land to Virayya-dēvaru of Nirili by Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar.

Vira-Nanja-Rāya-Oḍeyar.

121. A Tamil epigraph on the south wall of the Śiva temple at Periyapālayam, Erode Taluk, dated 1499, tells us that, during the rule of the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara śrī-vira-Nanja-Rāya-Udaiyar, his chief minister, Onnakkalāch-chettī, son of Nanjana-śeṭṭiyār of Emmaragālam in Tenaikkaṇāmbai-nāḍu, having purchased from the temple authorities 1 śalugai of land (specified with boundaries) for 4 pon, granted it for the lord of all the worlds, Kurakkuttali-tambirānār (the god of the Monkey-temple), the god of Mugandanūr (alias) Śrī-Kailāsanivāsa-chaturvēdimar-galam. The land was to be planted with 200 cocoanut trees and the income utilised for the decorations and enjoyments of the god. Śōliyāṇḍān Śūriyadēvan and other garuṇḍas of Ševvūr in Vāḍa-Pariśāra-nāḍu were made responsible for the conduct of the charity. Then follow signatures of the donor, the temple manager Uttamanambiyār, the mahājanas of Mugandanūr, Śōliyāṇḍān Śūriyadēvan, the accountant of Avināši Timayan, the officer of Avināši Āḍiyāṇan, the officer of Periyapālayam Śōmanan, the temple officer Puṭṭayan, the temple accountant Paṭṭinattan and some others. The engraver was Timayan-āchāri Ilakkanan of Šivanachchatram. Several of the signatories appear to be people of the Kannāḍa country. Tenaikkaṇāmbai is Terakanāmbi in Gundlupet Taluk and Emmaragālam, Hemmaragāla in Nanjangūd Taluk. The Kannāḍa form appa is used for the Tamil āna in jagadādhipatīy-appa. A pond at Mugandanūr is named Nanjarāyan-kuḷam, evidently after the chief of this record. Onnakkalā, the first part of the donor's name, is for the Kannāḍa Honnokkaḷa (a koluga of hon or gold coin), the man, according to the name, being supposed to possess that measure of gold coins.

BIJJAVARA.

122. There are two inscriptions relating to the chiefs of Bijjavara. The chief Kāḷa-Chikkappa-Gauḍa referred to in para 116 appears to be one of them. These chiefs seem to have been great patrons of learning. Virakta-Tōṇṭadārya, author of Siddhēśvara-purāṇa, Pāḷkurike-Sōmēśvara-purāṇa, Karnāṭaka-Śabdamanjari and other works, who flourished about 1560, mentions a chief of Bijjavara of the name of Tōṇṭada-Siddhalinga-bhūpa who was the patron of his guru's guru Chennanan-jēśa, the svāmi of the Nandiyapura throne. Mallikārjunakavi, who lived at the close of the 16th century and wrote Kannāḍa commentaries on Gururāja's Paṇḍitārādhyā-chāritra and Śaṅkarakavi's Basava-purāṇa, says that he was patronised by the Bijjavara chief Immaḍi Chikka-bhūpāla, son of Chikka-bhūpa and Sōmāmbikā. He calls his patron a modern Bhōja-rāja. From E C, XII, Maddagiri 21 we learn that this chief built the fort at Siddāpura near Maddagiri in 1593. The records copied during the year relate to Mummaḍi Chikkappa-Gauḍa who was a later chief of the line.

Mummaḍi Chikkappa-Gauḍa.

123. An inscription near Bhīmana-dōṇe on the south slope of Maddagiri-durga states that Hanumana-dōṇe was consecrated by Mummaḍi Chikapa-Gauḍaya in the year Vijaya. Though the spring is popularly known as Bhīmana-dōṇe, the name given in the epigraph is Hanumana-dōṇe, and there is also a fine figure of Hanumān sculptured on the rock near it to justify this name. The year Vijaya probably represents 1646. Another on the overhanging rock of a cave at the foot of Maddagiri-durga near Gurrammana-maṭha at some distance from Maddagiri tells us that Hiriyamma, consort of the mahānāḍu-prabhu Mummaḍi Chikkappa-Gauḍa of Bijjavara, caused to be erected, as a Śiva-dharma, a virakta-maṭha in the year Parābhava. It is probable that this maṭha is identical with the one now known as Gurrammana-maṭha. The year Parābhava may stand for 1606.

CHIKKANAYAKANHALLI.

124. There are two inscriptions of the Chikkanâyakanhalli chief Mudiappa-Nâyaka. A grant made by him in 1626 and another made by his general in 1623 were noticed in para 114 when speaking of the Vijayanagar king Râma-Dêva-Râya. One of the records mentioned above is in Doddayya's field to the west of the Taluk office at Chikkanâyakanhalli. It says that Mudiappa-Nâyaka's daughter Chenâji-amma, wife of Bairapa-Nâyaka, granted some land to Silavanta Bôyi-nâyaka. The other at Haṭṇa, EC, XII, Tiptūr 102, now revised, records that Mudiappa Nâyaka built a maṭha at Haṭṇa for Guru-Basavarâjadêvaru and granted some lands (specified). The period of both the epigraphs, which are not dated, may be about 1625. This chief, too, was a patron of learning. Sôsale Rêvanârâdhya, a Kannaḍa author, says that he wrote a Kannaḍa commentary on Mahimnasstava at the instance of the chief Mudi-Nâyaka, the maker of Chikanâyakapura (Chikanâyakapûshkartur Mudinâyaka-bhûbhujah).

CHITALDRUG.

125. An epigraph at the Śiva temple at Maskal, Hiriyūr Taluk, dated 1754, opens with the expression—the setting up and consecration of Madhukêśvara-linga, and then proceeds to say that Kāmagêti Baramanna-Nāyaka's (son, Medakêri-Nāyaka's son) Kastûri-Rangapa-Nāyaka granted, with pouring of water, Masakalu alias Venkatapura, belonging to Hiriyūr, to Murārîrāya-Gorapade; that Gorapade-rāya granted it, with pouring of water, to Hiride-Rāma-jamadāra; and that Rangapa-Nāyaka's charity to the temple was certain lands which the archaka was to enjoy on condition of properly conducting the services for the god.

BIJAPUR.

126. A few Persian inscriptions copied at Sira belong to the reign of Muhammad Âdil Shâh of Bijâpûr, though he is not named in them. One of them on a slab built into the north wall of the outhouse adjoining the Little Mosque (Plate XV, 1) refers to the construction of a mosque by Ali Nazr, a subordinate of Malik Rihân. It may be rendered thus:— "This holy, grand, lofty and glorious mosque was built by Ali Nazr expectant of the mercy of God, subordinate to Malik Raihân Mubâarak, may God pardon them (Ali Nazr and Raihân Mubâarak) through the rectitude of the benevolent prophet (referred to in the chapters of the Qurân) Yâ-sin and Tabârika." The mosque referred to in the present inscription must be different from the Little Mosque which, according to EC, XII, Sira 66, was founded by Najib Khân Ahrâri in A. D. 1614. It was probably built before 1651, the year in which Malik Rihân died (see Sira 66 b). Another on a black slab kept in the courtyard of the Big Mosque (Plate XV, 2) gives A.D. 1657 as the date of the construction of another mosque, which must be different from the Big Mosque, the latter, according to Sira 66 a, having been built by Shaikh Farîd in A. D. 1696. It says— "This holy mosque—the glory of which is high, the dignity of which is exalted and the rank of which is lofty—was built (or completed) on Friday the 7th Jumâda'lavval, 1067 years after the Flight." A third inscription on a white slab at the same place, which likewise refers to the erection of another mosque by Ahmad Khân, may probably belong to the same reign. It may be rendered thus:— "In the name of God, the Merciful and Compassionate. (In the name of) Allâh, Muhammad, Abûbâkr, Umar, Uthmân and Haidar (Ali), all of them. Built by Ahmad Khân. (Date) Monday (?) 20th of the holy month of Ramazân."

THE MUGHALS.

127. A Persian sanad in the possession of Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao of the Comptroller's Office, Bangalore, refers itself to the reign of the Mughal emperor Muhammad Shâh. It bears on the obverse four seals and three bits of writing in different places, the reverse giving some order about the cavalry. The seals name the emperor and an officer, and give the Hijri date and the regnal year. The first seal gives the date A. H. 1133 (A. D. 1720) and the regnal year 2, the officer named being Samsâmu-d-Daulâh Khândaurân Bahâdur Mansûr Jang; the second, A. H. 1135 (A. D. 1723) and the regnal year 5, the officer here being Itmâdu-d-Daulâh Nusrat Jang Bahâdur Qamru-d-dîn Khân Chin; the third, A. H. 1134 (A. D. 1722) and the regnal year 4, the officer being Zafar Khân Bahâdur Rustam Jang Raushanu-d-Daulâh; and the fourth, A. H. 1131 (A. D. 1719) and the regnal year 1, the officer in this case being Hamidu-d-din Khān Bahādur. The first bit of writing states—"Presented according to the fixed procedure. On the 5th Jumāda-th-thānī regnal year 10th (of Muhammad Shāh) the original (sanad) was deposited in the office of the Comptroller-General of the empire." The second says the same thing, but the date given is 12th Jumāda-th-thānī. The third says—".... Ali Muhammed Khān holding the rank of one thousand five hundred with four hundred horse." The writing on the reverse may be rendered thus : - "The horses and arms relative to the personal rank should be marked according to the rule and a certificate granted. In future the above marks should be checked. One hundred personal five with trappings. Second Jumāda II in the third year of the auspicious reign. The cavalry under the third Comptroller (of Military Accounts), province of Karnātak, (under) Farkhunda Bunyād.according to the rule. Noted on the 22nd Jumāda II, 3rd regnal year. Countersigned on the 5th Shābān, 3rd regnal year. Five horses with trappings. Written on the 27th Jumāda I, in the 10th year of the auspicious reign." A sanad in the possession of Saiyad Khassim, caretaker of Faridulla Makān at Sira, dated A. H. 1182 (A. D. 1768), is a parvānah or order from Hazrat Navāb Lāl Muhammad Khān Bahādur to Lingegaṇḍa of Hāgalavādikasabe stating that 10 kolagas of land have been granted, as a sarvamānya, to the takiya of Yaḍullā Shāh Sāhib situated behind Mattikere. The donor was apparently a Mughal Governor of Sira. Two inscriptions on tombs in the compound of Malik Rihān Dargā at Sira may also belong to the Mughal period. One of them merely gives the name? Sultān Balelatu 'Imurāj. Balela is a feminine name from Bilāl, the Muazzin of the Prophet. The other on a tomb said to be that of a 7 year old daughter of Aurangazebe merely names Allāh and Muhammad.

THE MAHRATTAS.

128. The Mahrāṭṭa general Murārirāv Ghōrpadē was referred to in para 125 when speaking of the Chitaldrug chief Kastūri-Rangappa-Nāyaka. An inscription on a pillar of the veranda of the Gōpālākriṣṇa temple at Sira, which appears to be a curious mixture of Mahrāṭhī and Kannaḍa, opens with the names of Bālōji-panḍita and Bālāji-Gaṇēśa and seems to record a grant to Hundaraiya's son Haḍada-nāyaka.

MYSORE.

129. A good number of records relating to the Mysore dynasty was copied during the year. They include a copper plate inscription of Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar and range in date from 1680 to 1881. About a dozen of these are sanads and nirūps issued by the Mysore kings. One of Tippu's records mentions his gift of a jewelled silver cup to a Hindu temple. Of the inscriptions of Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, which mostly record his gifts of gold and silver articles to temples, a brass plate containing the genealogy of the Mysore kings with figures and letter-press (Plate X, 1) is of some interest from an historical and artistic point of view. The latest is an inscription recording the erection of a temple in commemoration of the installation of H. H. Chāma-Rājendra-Oḍeyar in 1881.

Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar.

130. There are two records of the reign of this king. One of them, dated 1680, is a copy of a copper plate inscription found in a palm leaf manuscript in the possession of Pandit A. Srinivasarangachar of the Archæological office. After invocation of Śambhu and the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, it proceeds to give the pedigree of the king thus:—Purāṇic genealogy from the Moon to Yadu, in whose line arose king Śāma. He had three sons—Timma-Rāja, Krishna-Rāja and Beṭṭada-Chāma-Rāja. The son of the last was Rāja-nṛipa who, having conquered Tirumala-Rāya, took possession of his city and treasury. He presented a jewelled crown to the god Cheluvārāya of Yādavagiri (Melkoṭe). His son was Narasa-nṛipa, whose son was Śāma-Rāja. In his line was born Immaḍi-Rāja, in whose line, again, arose Kanṭhīrava-Narasa-Rāja. He built a temple of Narasimha at Śrīrangapuri (Serīngapatam) and endowed it liberally. After him came Doḍa-Dēva-Rāja, who sat on the jewel throne of Śrī-Ranga-Rāya. In his line was born Chika-Dēva-Rāja, son of Channamāmbā and husband of the Yelandūr lady. Then follow several verses in praise of the king. The inscription then records that, on the holy occasion of ardhodaya on the new-moon day of Pushya in the year Siddhārthi corresponding to the Saka year reckoned by the earth, the cypher, the duties and the moon (i.e., 1601), the rājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara praudha-pratāpa-mārtānda birudantembara-gaṇḍa, champion over kings who break their word, possessor of the emblems of the conch, the discus, Garuḍa, the fish, Hanumān, the lion, the boar, the sālva, the swan, the śarabha, and the peacock, Chika-Dēva-mahīpati of the Âtrēya-gōtra, Âśvalāyana-sūtra and Rik-śākhā made the village Garani, together with the six hamlets (named) attached to it, into an agrahāra named Chikadēvarāyapura, and, dividing it into 50 vrittis or shares, granted them in the presence of the god Ranganātha on the bank of the Kāvēri to Brahmans of various gōtras, sūtras and śākhās. Then follow details of the boundaries and names of the donees with their gōtras, etc. The composer of the inscription was Venkatāchārya and the engraver Viranārya, son of Gurumūrti. Of the donees, 40 were Śrīvaishṇavas, 5 Mādhyas and 5 Smārtas. This inscription, which is throughout in Sanskrit verse, differs in some respects from the published grants of this king. The other inscription of this ruler is a label on the pedestal of the processional image of the Varāhasvāmī temple at Mysore (Plate IX, 3), stating that the image was a present from him. Two more records at Dēvanūr and Chikka-Kaulande, Nanjangūd Taluk, which merely name those villages with the statement that they are included in the taluk of Chāmarājanagara, possibly belong to the same reign. The former has at the top the syllable Dē, supposed to be the initial of the king, which is also found by itself on a number of stones on the borders of the state.

Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar II.

131. About half a dozen sanads in the possession of Chennabasavadevaru of Nērale, Nanjangūd Taluk, relate to this king. One of them, dated 1759, is a nirūp addressed by Nanja-Rājaiya, a minister of this king, to Baṣeṭṭi, pārapattegāra of Mahiśūra-nagara, giving intimation of an order received from the king to the effect that the village Taṇḍeya of the revenue value of 120 varahas, situated in Mahiśūra-nagara-sthala under the jurisdiction of Mahiśūranagara-hōbaḷi vichārada-chāvaḍi, has been granted to provide for offerings of rice and lamps in the Prasanna-Nanjundēśvara temple built at his own expense on the northern bank of the Kapilā near Nanjangūd by Kaḷale Chikkaiya and for the upkeep of the satra or choultry there and of the Jangama-maṭha in the pēte of Mahiśūranagara, also founded by him, and telling him to see that the order is properly carried out. The nirūp was to be handed over to the party concerned after entry in the Śanubhāga's register. The sanad has two seals, one at the top and one at the bottom, the former containing the expression Śiva Śambhō Mahādēva and the latter the word Śri-Nanjūḍa. Nanja-Rājaiya of this record is the well-known general Kaḷale Nanja-Rāja. Another nirūp, also dated 1759, which is addressed to Chikkaiya, superintendent of the Mahiśūranagara hōbaḷi-sime, tells him that an umbali of the revenue value of 60 varahas in the Mahiśūranagara hōbaḷi-sime has been granted to Chenna for having prepared the ornamented seat (hase-jagali) on the occasion of the king's marriage, and directs him to give Chenna a village of that amount of income as an umbali. A third, also dated 1759, addressed to Chinnaia, intimates the appointment by the king of Bhagavānu-śāstri as a sthānika in the temple at Nanjangūd in place of Śankara-dikshita, and directs him to see that all the privileges pertaining to the office are duly granted to the new man. The sthānikas were entitled to some wet and dry lands, a house or house-site, a portion of the cakes prepared in the temple and some money payment on festival occasions. A fourth, dated 1760, addressed to Lakshmīkāntaiya, superintendent of the Mahiśūranagara hōbaḷi-sime, refers to the former grant of Taṇḍeya for the maintenance of Kaḷale Chikkaiya's temple, satra and maṭha, and adds that as a further grant of land of the revenue value of 28 varahas has been made by the king he shall see that suitable land of that amount of income is made over to the party concerned. A fifth, dated 1763, addressed to Nanjarājaiya, superintendent of the Paṭṭana hōbaḷi-sime, tells him that Kaḷale Chikkaiya has purchased some lands in the Paṭṭana hōbaḷi-sime for the upkeep of his charities, and directs him to set apart the lands according to the sale-deeds for the several charities. Two silver chauris of the Lakshmīkānta temple at Kaḷale, Nanjangūd Taluk, kept in the Taluk Treasury at Nanjangūd, bear inscriptions stating that they were presents to the temple from Kaḷale Nanja-Rāja.

Hyder.

132. There are four sanads of the time of Hyder, two in the possession of Saiyad Khassim, caretaker of Faridullā Shāh Makān at Sira and two in the possession of Chennabasavadevaru of Nērale, Nanjangūd Taluk. One of the former, dated 1769, addressed to the customs-officer Lingappaia, directs him to pay to the presence of Yadullā Shāh Pādshāh Husēni $1\frac{1}{2}$ haṇas every day out of the amount of the customs collected at Hāgalavāḍi. The other, dated 1775, issued by Pradhāna Venkappaia to Raghupataia, intimates the receipt of a parvānah or order that the former grant of 5 koḷagas of land should be continued to the fakir of Yadullā Shāh (Dargā) and directs him to make over the land to the fakir. The sanad was to be handed over to the donee after entry in the Palace daftar. One of the two sanads at Nērale, dated 1771, states that according to an order received from Hyder the grant of the two villages Ajagalli and Kakkarahatti of the total revenue value of 60 varahas in Tagadūr-sthala, as an umbali, should be continued to Chennaiya who prepared the ornamented marriage seat in the palace (see previous para). The other, dated 1780, addressed to Vaidyalingaiya, pūrupatyagāra of Tāyūr, confirms the same grant. Here the donee Chennaiya is said to be the son-in-law of Chikkaiya of Nērale.

Tippu.

133. Three sanads, one Persian and two Mahrāthi, in the possession of Khāji Muhammad Inam of Maddagiri relate to Tippu. The Persian sanad (Plate XV, 3), dated A. D. 1787, is addressed to the revenue collectors of the present and future, the Dēsmukhs and the Dēspāndes of the village Sidāpūr, Taluk Maddagiri, Sarkār, intimating that the village Kambadahalli with a revenue of 36 huns (Bādshāhi sikka) in the Bidnūr sarkār is restored (and granted for the second time) to Muhammad Qāsim Darvish for the expenses of the mosque, and directing them to make over the possession of the entire village to the above-named Darvish from the 15th of of the year Dalū, corresponding to the 13th Junāda I, 1200 (Muhammadi era), in order that he may utilise the income of the village for his maintenance, and occupy himself in praying for the prosperity of the king day and night. The sanad was written on the 16th Shahrivar of the year 41 at Sūgūr. On the back of the sanad is the remark—"Signed through Muhammad Karīmullāh Khān and Nūruddīn Muhammad." There are two seals on the sanad, one on the obverse and one on the reverse. The former has the name Tīpū Sultān and the date 1186; while the latter bears the date 1198 with the following inscription in four lines.—

Allāhumma 'nsur man nasar dīna Muhammad. Kachaihrī Sadarat— which means "O God! help those who help the faith of Muhammad. High Court." According to the abtās system newly introduced by Tippu, Dalū corresponds to Parābhava, the 40th year of the Hindu cycle, and Shā to Plavanga, the 41st year. On both sides of the sanad there are also bits of writing in Mahrāthi and Kannāḍa: the Mahrāthi bits give the date—1st of Ahamadi (Chaitra) of the year Shā (Plavanga)—and the names of the clerks, Śrīnivāsarāv and Bābūrāv; and the Kannāḍa bits, the names of the clerks Śyāmaiya and Venkaṭarāu. One of the Mahrāthi sanads is a copy of the Persian sanad addressed to the same officers including Amildars. It directs them to pay the amount to Muhammad Khāssim without looking forward to a new sanad from hujūr every year and tells them that the original has two Persian seals and is written in three languages—Kannāḍa, Persian and Hindivi. The other appears to be addressed to the sānabhōg of Kambadahalli. It adds that the amount is intended to provide for the lighting charges of the mosque and for the private expenses of Khāji Muhammad Khāssim. A jewelled silver cup in the Śrīkanthēśvara temple at Nanjangūd bears an inscription stating that it was a present from Tipu Sultāna Pādāṣa. My thanks are due to Mr. G. Yazdani, M.A., Nazim, Archaeological Department, Hyderabad State, for having kindly deciphered for me the above Persian sanad as well as the inscriptions noticed in paras 126 and 127.

Chāma-Rāja-Oḍeyar (IX).

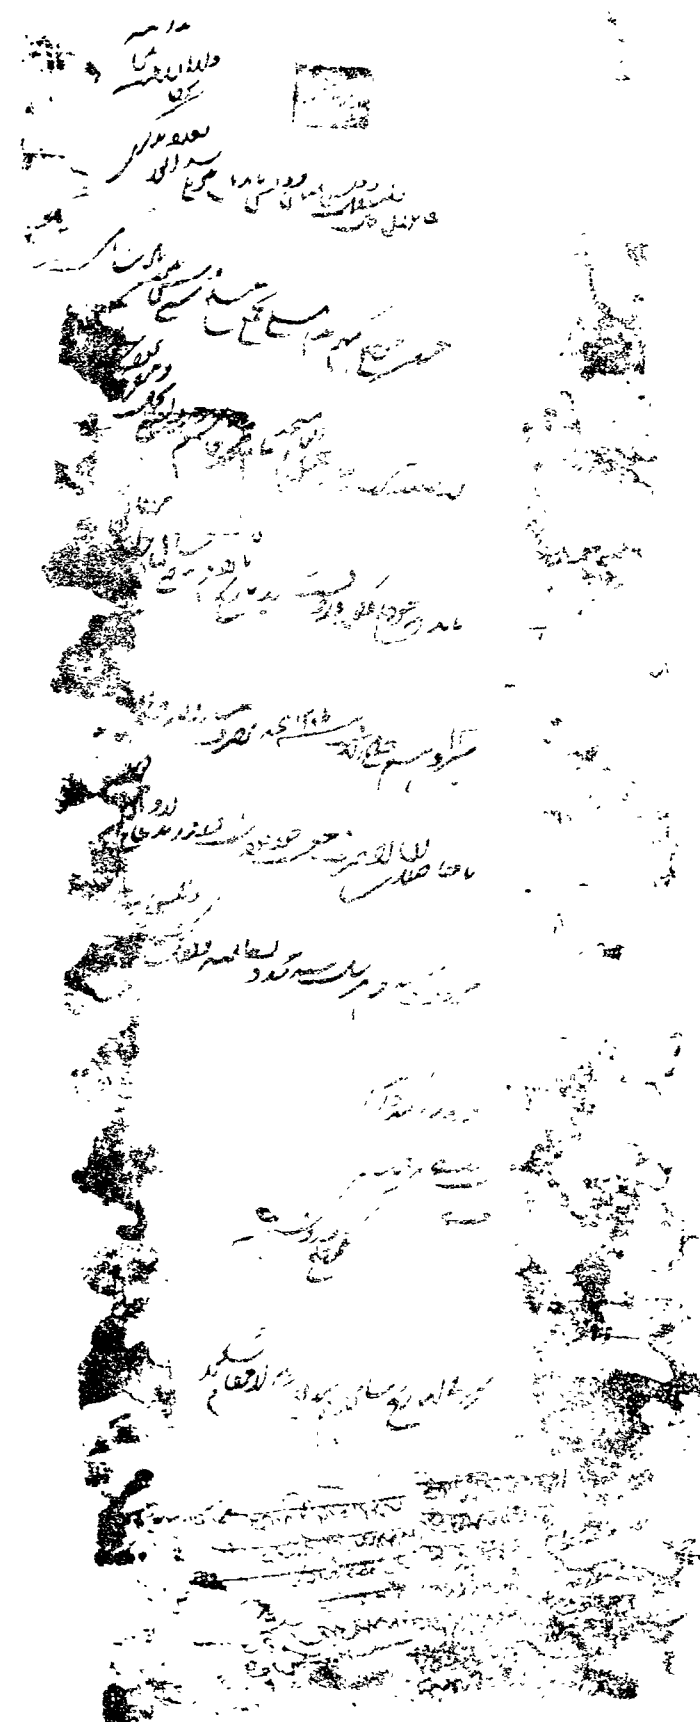

134. A few inscriptions noticed on temple vessels, etc., belong to the reign of this king. Two lampstands in the Śāntiśvara-basti at Mysore bear inscriptions in the form of a Sanskrit verse stating that they were presented to Śānti-svāmi by

1. PERSIAN INSCRIPTION AT THE LITTLE MOSQUE, SISA.

2. PERSIAN INSCRIPTION AT JUMMA MASJID, SIRA

3. PERSIAN LAGNAD ISSUED BY TIPPU.

the queen of Châma-Râja, named Dêvirammanni, for the attainment of perfect faith. Four brass vessels in the same basti were also presents from her as indicated by the inscriptions on them which state that they were given by her for the anointment (abhishêka) of Śântiśa of Mahishâpura. From the inscriptions on three silver vessels belonging to the Kaivalyadêvi temple at Uppinahalli near Kalale, kept in the Taluk Treasury at Nanjangûd, we learn that the vessels were the gifts of Lakshmmammanni, another queen of this king.

Krishna-Râja-Odeyar III.

135. A good number of records of this king was copied during the year. Most of them record his gifts to temples. There are also some others in which gifts made by his queens, relatives and dependents are recorded. There are besides a few others which belong to his time, though he is not named in them. The earliest of the records are two Mahrâthi sanads received from Khâji Muhammad Iman of Maddagiri. One of them, dated 1808, issued by Pûrñaiya to Khâji Muhammad Imâm of Maddagiri, tells him that it is proposed to appoint him to the office of Khâji of Maddagiri Taluk and gives details of the Duties of a Khâji. duties to be performed by him under five heads. (1)

He was to send through the Amildar a list of all the Musalmâns of the Taluk noting the professions followed by them in every case. He was to conduct the marriage, funeral and other ceremonies among them and receive whatever was paid by them according to their means. He must not demand more; and in cases of real poverty he must conduct the above ceremonies gratis for the pleasure of God. (2) He must keep the mosque neat and tidy and get it repaired when necessary through the Amildar. (3) He must see that there are no quarrels and riots among the Musalmâns. In case there was a breach of the peace, he must report it to the Amildar and get the dispute settled. (4) If any absconders among the servants of either the Sarkâr or the Company are found to reside in the Taluk, if thieves and murderers are known to move about under the guise of fakirs, or if any deceit or treachery is found out on the part of the Musalmâns, he must at once write to the Amildar about the matter. In case he does not take any action, even when knowing these things, he shall be liable to punishment. (5) If any one unjustly oppresses the Musalmâns, he must make a report to the Amildar and have the matter settled; and in case the Amildar does not decide the case, he must appeal to Hujûr. He was to pay daily attention to these five heads of duties. The other, also dated 1808, issued by Pûrñaiya to Khâji Muhammad Husên of Koratagere, tells him that it is proposed to appoint him to the office of Khâji of Koratagere Taluk and gives the very same details as those mentioned above of the duties expected of him. Both the sanads bear a seal containing the following inscription in three lines in Nâgari characters—

Nijapûrña-sukha- śrî-Lakshminrisimha.

Three more sanads, dated 1814, in the possession of Khâji Saiyad Mohiyaddin Huseni of Chitaldrug, also relate to the office of Khâji conferred on some individual by the king. One of them, addressed to Saiyad Muhammad Husêni, tells him that he has been appointed head Khâji of the Chitaldrug Division (tukaḍi) on a monthly salary of 10 Kanṭhirâyi carahas; another, addressed to Lakshmaṇa-râya, Âmila of Chitaldrug, intimates the appointment and directs him to disburse the sanctioned salary according to English months and to take work from him; and the third, addressed to the Âmilas and Killedârs of the thirteen Taluks of the Chitaldrug Division, directs them to see that the Khâjis of the several Taluks obey the head Khâji and that any disputes among the Musalmâns in their jurisdiction are submitted to his decision. The thirteen Taluks mentioned as constituting the Chitaldrug Division are Chitradurga, Hiriyûru, Anaji, Molakâlmuru, Dâvanagere, Mâyakonḍa, Talaku, Doddêri, Mattôḍu, Hosadurga, Kanakuppa, Bîlichôḍu and Holalkere. All the three sanads have a seal at the top giving the name of the king and his father, and the signature of the king Śrî-Krishna at the bottom. Another record in the possession of the same individual, bearing the same date, may also be noticed here as it mentions the duties of the head Khâji. It is an order from the Adâlat Court issued by Saiyad Ali, the State Khâji, to the head Khâji Saiyad Muhammad

Duties of the head Khâji.

Husêni, giving details of the duties to be discharged by him under seven heads.
(1) He was to appoint suitable men for the office of Khâji in the Taluks, to supervise their work, and to replace them, if found unfit, by better men. (2) He must make proper arrangements for the education of Musalmān boys and girls. (3) He may himself or by a deputy look after the duties of the Khāji at Chitaldrug. (4) He must take a census of the Musalmān population and send it up every year. (5) If any Musalmān misbehaves himself, he must impose a fine on him and remit the amount to Kachēri. (6) If his deputy is either incompetent or guilty of any crime, he must replace him by a suitable man and report the matter. (7) He must himself recite the Khudbā namāz twice a year outside the town. I must express my thanks to Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao of the Comptroller's office, Bangalore, for having kindly helped me in the decipherment of the Mahrāthi sanads noticed above as well as those dealt with in para 133.

136. We may now consider the inscriptions recording the king's gifts to temples. To begin with the Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara temple at Nanjangūd. Several gold and silver articles found in this temple were presents from him. Only three of these bear dated inscriptions, namely, a gold snake vehicle, a silver vessel known as sahasradhāre, and another named dhārāpātre or śitakumbha. The inscriptions on the first two state that they were presented in 1815 and 1816 respectively by Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar of the Mysore State, son of Chāma-Rāja-Oḍeyar; while the one on the third tells us that it was presented in 1837 by Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar of Mysore after the performance of the tulābhāra gift on the holy occasion of the summer solstice. His other gifts to the temple, as denoted by the inscriptions on them, were two large gold plates, a silver vessel known as aḍḍaṇige and a silver lamp-stand. As stated in para 37, the top parapet around the temple has a large number of stucco figures, with labels below them giving their names, representing the nine planets, the eight regents of the directions, the seven Mothers, the twenty-five lilā-mūrtis of Śiva, some of the sixty-three Śaiva devotees, and varieties of Dakṣiṇāmūrti, Subrahmaṇya, Bhairava and Gaṇapati, and of tāṇḍava. These labels, about 200 in number, have to be assigned to the reign of this king as he is said to have got the figures made. They are of great interest from an iconographic point of view. Thirty-two varieties of Gaṇapati, sixteen of Subrahmaṇya, ten of Dakṣiṇāmūrti and eight of Bhairava are named and illustrated, as also the seven kinds of tāṇḍava. The names given are:—Gaṇapati: (1) Bhilla, (2) Duṇḍi, (3) Taruṇa, (4) Tāṇḍava, (5) Vira, (6) Lakṣmī, (7) Chaturmukha, (8) Śakti, (9) Vijaya, (10) Rīṇavimōchana, (11) Mahā, (12) Srisṭi, (13) Pañchamukha, (14) Siddhi, (15) Ēkadanta, (16) Uchchhishta, (17) Kshipra, (18) Hēramba, (19) Ūrdhvagaṇēśa, (20) Kshipraprasāda, (21) Mahā, (22) Bijāpurada, (23) Sarvāthasiddhi, (24) Sadaśiva, (25) Vighnarāja, (26) Tryakshara, (27) Yāga, (28) Śūra, (29) Ibhavaktra, (30) Karindra, (31) Rāmā and (32) Gauriputra; Subrahmaṇya: (1) Jñānaśakti, (2) Skanda, (3) Dēvasēnāpati, (4) Subrahmaṇya, (5) Gajārūḍha, (6) Śarakānana, (7) Kārtikēya, (8) Kumāra, (9) Shanmukha, (10) Tārakāntaka, (11) Sēnāni, (12) Brahma, (13) Śāstā, (14) Valli, (15) Kalyāṇa, and (16) Bāla; Dakṣiṇāmūrti: (1) Viṇā, (2) Sām̐ba, (3) Yāga, (4) Samhāra, (5) Śakti, (6) Jñāna, (7) Anushthāna, (8) Vyākhyāna, (9) Vidyā, and (10) Vaṭamūla; Bhairava: (1) Asitāṅga, (2) Krōḍha, (3) Unnata, (4) Kapāla, (5) Bhīṣhaṇa, (6) Samhāra (two labels are effaced); Tāṇḍava: Ānanda, (2) Sandhyā, (3) Umā, (4) Gauri, (5) Kālīkā, (6) Tripura, and (7) Samhāra. For the twenty-five lilā-mūrtis of Śiva see Report for 1912, para 134. From an inscription on a silver mask kept in the Taluk Treasury at Nanjangūd we learn that the mask was presented by Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar to the Ōṅkārēśvara temple at Sindhuvalli. Two metallic figures kept in the Varāhasvāmi temple at Mysore (Plate IX, 1 and 4) bear inscriptions stating that they were presents from this king to the Prasanna-Krishnasvāmi temple at Mysore. The date of these inscriptions must be 1829, the year in which the latter temple was built and the images consecrated (see Report for 1908, para 80).

137. Other records of this king are two pictures with letterpress, one on paper, dated 1857, and the other on a brass plate, dated 1860 (Plate X, 1), framed and kept in the Jagannmōhan Palace, Mysore. They give the genealogy of the Mysore kings from Yadu-Rāya, the founder of the family, to Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, comprising in all 22 rulers, together with some details about each, and are mostly similar in contents. The picture on the brass plate, which is in the shape of a lotus, is named the santānāmbuja (progeny-lotus) of Yadu-Rāya in the crescent like portion at the bottom, and the letterpress around it consists of a chûrnikâ or learned prose passage giving on account of the birth, Progeny-lotus. accession, pious acts and literary works of Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar III. The chûrnikâ will be noticed later on. The details given about the kings beginning with Yadu-Râya, represented by the figure to the left at the bottom, and ending with Krishna-Râja III, represented by the figure at the top, are shown in the following table:—

A few further details are also given in connection with some of the kings. (1) is said to have come from Dvâraki Vijâpura. He punished the wicked, acquired some minor principalities (pâlyapattu) and created the Mysore State. (5) also acquired some principalities. (7) escaped injury from a stroke of lightning. (9) acquired the throne of Dharmarâja, was crowned at Seringapatam in Śaka 1533, presented the crown Râjamuḍi to the god at Melkote and escaped injury from poison. (10) built the Kalyâṇi (pond) at Melkote. (12) issued coins. (13) built a gôpura to the Trinayanêśvara temple at Mysore, the tank Dêvarâyasamudra and steps to the Châmuṇḍi Hill; he also got made the big Basava on the hill. (14) got the title Râja-Jagadêva together with some insignia from Delhi, was renowned as Navakôṭi-Nârâyana, and introduced regulations and rules in the administration of the State. (16) instituted many festivals at Melkote. (17) tried to put down the wicked sarvâdhikâri generals. (18) put down the sarvâdhikâri generals, who proved traitors to his elder brother, through Hyder Khân whom he had purchased, and made Hyder the Commander-in-Chief with the title Navâb. (19) sent an army with Navâb Hyder Khân who acquired for the king Chitaldrug and Nagar. (20) had Navâb Hyder Khân as his general. (21) performed kôṭi-panchâksharimantra-japa and putrakâmêshṭi (a sacrifice for obtaining a son).

We may now notice briefly the prose passage or chûrnikâ relating to Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar III. It opens with a short notice of the previous kings and then proceeds to give on account of this king as follows:—Hé was the son of Mummaḍi Châma-Râja and Kempananjamâmbâ; was born on Monday the 2nd lunar day of the dark fortnight of Āshāḍha in the year Ānanda corresponding to the Śaka year 1717 (A. D. 1794); was crowned on Monday the 13th lunar day of the dark fortnight of Jyēshṭha in the year Siddhārthi (1799); was of the Ātrēya-gōtra, Āśvalāyana-sūtra and Rik-śākhā; performed tulāpurusha and other great gifts and gave away agrahāras; built wells, tanks, temples, towers, choultries, flights of steps, bridges, maṇṭapas and dharmaśālās; made a pilgrimage to Uḍupi, Subrahmaṇya and other holy places; was the author of the lexicon Chāmuṇḍa-laghu-nighaṇṭu, Kṛṣṇa-kathā-sāra-sangraha, Śrītatvanidhi treating of all the deities, Rāmakathā-sāra-sangraha, Saugandhikā-pariṇaya, Mahākōśa-sudhākara containing words from all the kōśas or lexicons, Sūryachandrādi-vamśāvataraṇa, Sankhyāratnakōśa with a commentary named Prabhāvali, Grahaṇa-darpaṇa, Daśāvibhāga-pradīpikā, Chaturanga-sāra-sarvasva adorned with Pūrṇatārā, Jagannmōhana and other diagrams illustrating the wonderful movements of the horse, Śrīchakramanjari, Dēvatā-stōtrāvali, Dēvatā-maṅgalāśāsana, Dēvatāshṭōttarāshṭōttara, commentaries on the Purāṇas, and many other works; had the festival of the 60th year of his coronation celebrated in the Śaka year 1782 (1859); had the titles rājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara prauḍha-pratāpa apratimavīra-narapati birud-ent-embara-gaṇḍa lōkaikavīra Yadukula-payahpārāvāra-kālānidhi, and the emblems of the conch, the discus, the elephant-goad, the axe, the makara, the fish, the śarabha, the sālva, the gaṇḍa-bhērūṇḍa, the boar, Hanumān, Garuḍa, and the lion; and sat on the resplendent jewel throne on which Rāja-kshitipāla and other paramount kings descended from the lunar race had successively sat in the great Mahīśūra-saṁsthāna, the abode of the wealth of the Karpātaka country, which was an ornament of all the countries that adorned the whole circle of the earth. We are then told that he had this santānāmbuja prepared in Śaka 1783 corresponding to A. D. 1860 by the head artist Tippaṇṇa, son of the artist Rāmappa and grandson of Sarige-Chennappa.

138. Among other inscriptions of this king's time, though he is not named in some of them, one on the Rudrākṣi-vāhana in the Śrīkanṭhēśvara temple at Nanjangūḍ, tells us that the vāhana (vehicle) was presented to the temple by Lingājammaṇṇi of Kṛṣṇavilāsa, the lawful consort of Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar of the Mysore State. A gold cup in the same temple was a present from Marīnanjavve, a maid servant of the above-named queen, to the shrine of the goddess. Two gold necklaces at the same place were the gifts of the svāmīs of Śringēri, the name Jagadguru Śrī-Narasimha-Bhārati being given in one of the two inscriptions. From the inscription on a silver mask in the same temple we learn that the mask was presented in 1846 by Venkaṭalakshamma, mother of Hosūru-Subbanna who was a servant of the king. Three silver articles belonging to the Mallikārjuna temple at Hura kept in the Taluk Treasury at Nanjangūḍ, were presents respectively from Biga Mallarājaiya, Hampe-arasu and Regimentdār Kṛṣṇarāje-arasu's wife Mallājammaṇṇi. An inscription on the dhvaja-stambha or flag-staff of the Lakshminarasimha temple on the top of Dēvarāyadurga, Tumkur Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1832, states that Bettadakōṭe Basavarājaiya's son Channarājaiya's Mallarājaiya built the prākāra or enclosure and the gōpura or tower, and set up the flag-staff. A silver cup in the Ānjanēya temple at Chikkanāyakanhalli bears an inscription stating that it was a present from Basavarājaiya, son of Hampaiya of Talakāḍu. An inscription, consisting of three Sanskrit verses, on the pedestal of the metallic image of Anantanātha in the Śāntiśvara-basti at Mysore tells us that Dēvarāja-nṛpati, a bee at the lotus feet of Jina and a Kshatriya of the Kaśyapa-gōtra, had the image made at the conclusion of Anantavrata observed by him along with his wife Kempammaṇṇi, and set it up in 1832. Two more inscriptions on brass-plated doorways in the same basti record that one of the doorways was the gift in 1814 of Nāgaiya, son of Dhanikāra Padmaia, and the other, of Nāga, son of Dhanikāra Marīnāga.

Chāma-Rājendra-Oḍeyar.

139. An inscription on a beam of the Kēśava temple at Chikkanāyakanhalli states that the god of the temple was set up on the 25th March 1881, the day of the installation of the Mahārāja Chāma-Rājendra-Oḍeyar.

MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS.

140. A few of the inscriptions which cannot be assigned to any specific dynasty of kings will be noticed under this head. A Tamil epigraph at the Doddappa temple at Hēmāvatī, Maḍaksira Taluk, records the setting up of the god Svayambhūdēvar alias Tiruvirāṇiśvaranūḍaiya Mahādēvar by ...varganḍan Tānguvān alias Uttama-Śōla-vaḷavadarayan of Śeyyūr in Tonḍai-maṇḍalam for the merit of his parents and the grant by him of 2 pon to Īśāna-jīyar to provide for worship, a twilight lamp and an offering of 2 mānas of rice for the god every day out of the interest on the sum. The donor says that he will place on his head the feet of those who maintain the well and the charity. As Īśāna-jīyar is also mentioned in another Tamil record at the same place of Kulōttunga-Chōla III (see para 87), the period of the present record may be about the close of the 12th century. Another Tamil epigraph in the Ranganātha temple on the Pailubaṇḍe hill of the same Taluk records a grant for that god by the same individual. An inscription at Hadināru, E C, III, Nanjangūḍ 129, now revised, which appears to be dated 1178, records a grant for some god by the mahā-prabhu and the prajegal, including Mayanna, Mārādēva and others, of Adirāru. Another in the prākāra of the Rangasvāmi temple at bēchirākh Rangāpura, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, which seems to bear the date 1300, states that pūjāri Mallappa, son of Lakagoṇḍa-Rāmagōṇḍa, set up the figures of his parents. Another at Viḡṇasante, Tiptūr Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1350, records that Lingaṇa-hebāruva and the prabhus and merchants, having assembled, made a grant for some god. Another on the image of Sarasvatī in the Kallēśvara temple at Heggere, Hosadurga Taluk, tells us that Virādēvaya's son Chikapa-oḍeya had the face of the image mended. The date of the record may be about 1400. A Telugu inscription at Lūsuttinakōṭe to the east of Itakadibbanhalli, Maddagiri Taluk, informs us that Pāṇḍu-rāja's son Dharmarāja, the latter's younger brother Arjuna, his son Abhimanyu, and Sahadēva, Nakula and Bhīma were the rulers of Ēḍuchuṭulakōṭe (or the fort with seven encircling walls). The period of the epigraph may be about 1450. Another record at the Garuḍaganba of the Ranganātha temple on the Pailubaṇḍe hill, Maḍaksira Taluk, states that during the rule of ...ṇḍadēva, in the year Manmatha, Dāsa-jīya's son Hiriya Baṁmeya sold a portion of his vritti to Appasiva in the presence of Uttuva-dannāyaka, his younger brother Bōgayya and the ascetics of the Nonabēśvara temple at Henjeru. Then follow names of witnesses. By consent of both the parties, this was written by sēnabōva Hariyanna. The engraver was the sculptor Kalōja. It is to be regretted that the name of the ruler is defaced. The year Manmatha may stand for 1476. Another at Karikallumorāḍi near Nanigānahalli, Pāvugaḍa Taluk, which seems to bear the date 1503, records a grant of land to Chika-Kāduraya, son of Jāmalakada-rāya, for having repaired a breach in the tank. Another at Maddagiri, EC, XII, Maddagiri 14, now revised, says that Jinasēnadēva's disciple Mānika.....lajinātha made a grant for a svāsti for the god Mallinātha and that....
....gōvi Dānemaīya's wife Payama gave 20 carahas to provide for offerings of rice for the same god and for gifts of food. The date of the record appears to be 1531. Another at Kallukōṭe, EC, XII, Sira 94, dated 1600, which has now been revised, states that Nāgaṇa-gauḍa, the gauḍa of Kallukōṭe, son of Kūlappa-gauḍa, who was the son of Gaurigoṇḍa-gauḍa, who was again the son of Gangegoṇḍa-gauḍa, built the Mailāralinga temple at the village for the merit of his father. Two more stones at the village bear inscriptions stating that the land bounded by them was the mānya or tax-free property of the same god.

141. Among the other records, a copy of a Telugu copperplate inscription found in a palm leaf manuscript in the possession of Pandit A. Srinivasarangachar of the Archaeological office, which is dated 1606, records the grant of 1 rūka for every loom every year by all the Padmasāle weavers living in Roddam-nāḍu, Penagoṇḍa-sima, Parigi-sthalam, Venkaṭāpuram, Dhālivattam, Śāsanakōṭa, Chōlemari, Kalukunṭa, Miḍigēsi, Vengalaṁmapalle, Honnavaram, Kaśināyanapalle, Chikīnāyanapalle, Bhūdhāli, Hiriyūru, Chalḷekere, Doddēri, Kundilpi, Niḍigallu, Pāgoṇḍa, Chiyēḍudurgam, Gutti, Tāḍiparti, Gurramgoṇḍa, Chandragiri, Gaṇḍikōṭadurgam and other places to the establisher of the Vēdic path, āchārya of both the Vēdāntas, worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Venkaṭēśvara, Narasimha-tātāchārya of the Śāthamarshana-gōtra, Āpastamba-sūtra and Yajuś-śākhā, son of Rangayāchārya and grandson of Tirumala-Penagoṇḍa Peddappalāchārya. The reason given for the grant is that on the occasion of a dispute about the use of a flag between the Paṭṭasāles and the Padmasāles in the temple at Peda-Dhālivatṭam (para 17), the donee took great pains on behalf of the Padmasāles, procured for them the same privileges at the temple as those enjoyed by them at Kadiri, Tirupati and other holy places and had a stone inscription set up to that effect. The Padmasāles are described as worshippers of the lotus feet of the god Mallikārjuna, as grandsons of the sages Bhrigu and Makha and as sons of the sage Mārkaṇḍeya, as descendants, not born from the womb, of Gārgya, as promoters of the ? Bhāvanārūpa-vamśa, as of the Mārkaṇḍeya-gōtra and as belonging to the abode of Mahālakṣmi. A copperplate inscription, of which only the last plate is available, in the possession of the pūjāri of the Mallēśvara temple at Miḍigēṣi, Maddagiri Taluk, refers to the agni-pravēśa or entering fire of Millaṃma (para 18) and says that at that time she prayed for the prosperity of the Seṭṭenōru family born by the favor of the god Mallēśvara of Miḍigēṣi and exhorted her relatives not to neglect the service of the god. Its date appears to be 1612. An epigraph on a pillar in the Snāna-maṇṭapa on the bank of the Kapilā at Nanjangūḍ, dated 1633, records a grant by Saṇṇa-Basava-gavuḍa of Mūgūr to provide for the fortnightly and monthly festivals of the god Nanjunḍēśvara of Nanjangūḍ. Another at Guṇḍarahalli, E.C., XII, Pāvugaḍa 8, now revised, which seems to be dated 1642, appears to record that Bevvē-nāyaka and Nāgaṇṇayya set up a vrindāvana at Guṇḍirahalli and granted some land for its upkeep. Another on the tower over the garbhagriha of the Mallinātha-basti at Maddagiri, which appears to bear the date 1650, tells us that the tower was built by Sarvajña-ṣeṭṭi and his younger brother Geluvaiya's son Chiga-Nēmaṇṇa. Another on a beam of the Mallēśvara shrine at Basavanpura, Nanjangūḍ Taluk, says that the shrine was built by Bālanna-ṣeṭṭi of Śrīrangapaṭṭana in 1726. A copperplate inscription, consisting of one plate measuring 1' 10½" by 8½" in the Virakta-maṭha at Huḷiyār, Chikkanāyakanhalli Taluk, dated 1802, records the grant of certain dues to the maṭha by the assembly of gaṇḍas, merchants and others. The institution is named Jvalatkaṇṭha-Mahantappa's maṭha and is said to be affiliated to the Muragi-maṭha of Chitaldrug. Then follow signatures of a very large number of people of various places. A letter in the possession of Saiyad Khassim, caretaker of Farīdullā Shāh Makān at Sira, which is named ināmati-kā-gaḍu and appears to bear the date 1828, is written to the fakīr of the Makān by Venkappa, the gaṇḍa of Śīryaha, and śyānabāga Venkaṭēśaiya. It states that formerly during the time of Hyder Mir-sāhēb had given 5 koḷagas of land, as a mānya to the Makān; that subsequently Mukundarāv gave a sanad granting only 2 koḷagas of land; and that according to this sanad the land is now made over to him. An English inscription on a tomb in the compound of the Travellers' Bungalow at Sira records that Ellen, wife of Lieutenant and Adjutant H. M. Ferguson, 45th Regiment, M. N. I., died of cholera at Seerah on the 14th March 1846, at the early age of 16 after a brief but happy union of 40 days. An inscription at the Ānjanēya temple at Haḷe-Itakalōṭi, Maddagiri Taluk, dated 1865, records the renovation of the temple by Dāḷa-gavuḍa's son Iradāḷe-gavuḍa.

2. Numismatics.

142. The coins examined during the year under report were referred to in paras 37 and 50 above. Besides the large number of silver and copper pieces examined at Nanjangūḍ (para 37), 66 coins, consisting of 8 gold and 58 copper pieces, were examined during the year. The 8 gold coins were received for examination from the Archaeological Superintendent, Poona, and the copper pieces from Mr. M. N. Rangasami Iyengar, Triplicane. Of the gold coins, 4 belong to Vijayanagar, 1 to Gaṇḍikōṭa and 1 to Śivāji; the remaining two being the so-called Lingāyat pagodas. Of the copper coins, 36 belong to Mysore and 21 to the Dutch East India Company; the remaining piece being a Muhammadan coin with an illegible legend. With the exception of some of the gold coins all the others have already been noticed in my previous Reports. Of the 36 copper coins of Mysore, 1 is a pre-Muhammadan 1-pie piece with an elephant surmounted by the sun and moon on the obverse and double cross lines with symbols in the interspaces on the reverse (see Report for 1913, Plate IX, figure 8). All the others are coins of Tipu, 4 dated A. M. 1215, 1 each dated A. M. 1217, 1218 and 1223, 13 dated A. M. 1224 and 5 dated A. M. 1225, the remaining 10 being undated or bearing illegible dates. Of the 4 coins of A. M. 1215, two are 4-pie pieces minted at Bangalore, and two.

1-pie pieces minted at Paṭan. The coins of A. M. 1217 and 1218 are 1-pie pieces struck at Paṭan, while that of A. M. 1222 is a 2-pie piece also struck at Paṭan. Of the 13 coins of A. M. 1224, three are 4-pie pieces minted at Nagar, two, 2-pie pieces, and eight, 1-pie pieces, all minted at Paṭan. Of the coins of A. M. 1225, one is a 2-pie piece, and four, 1-pie pieces, all struck at Paṭan. Three of the undated coins are 4-pie pieces, 1 struck at Nagar and 1 at Faiz Hisār (or Gooty), the place of mintage being illegible on the 3rd; two, 2-pie pieces, 1 minted at Paṭan and 1 at Bangalore; and five, 1-pie pieces, 3 struck at Paṭan and 2 at Nagar. Almost all these coins are described and illustrated in my Reports for 1912 and 1913. The 21 coins of the Dutch East India Company are $\frac{1}{4}$ stiver pieces known as salis in Southern India. They may be divided into four classes according to the position of the lions on the reverse as illustrated by figures 33-36 on Plate XIV of my Report for 1914. We have 10 pieces of class 1, bearing the dates 1705, 1728, 1744, 1753, 1758, 1764, 1765, 1785 and 1786; 4 of class 2, dated 1744, 1745, 1755 and 1787; 6 of class 3, dated 1753, 1754, 1781 and 1784; and 1 of class 4, dated 1789.

143. Of the 4 gold coins of Vijayanagar, 2 belong to Krishṇa-Dēva-Rāya (see my Report for 1909, Plate IX, figures 6 and 7; and Report for 1912, Plate V, figures 49 and 50), and 2 to Venkatapati-Rāya (I or II). The obverse of the latter bears a standing figure of Viṣṇu under a canopy, and the reverse, the legend (1) Śrī-Venka (2) ṭēṣvarā (3) ya namah in three lines in Nāgari characters (see Elliot, figure 105; Vincent Smith, Plate XXX, figure 32; Bidie, figures 15 and 15 a). Some scholars are of opinion that these specimens were also coined at Raidrug, Bellary District, by Venkatapati Naidu, the Pālegār of that place. One coin has the same obverse as that of Venkatapati-Rāya's coins, but bears on the reverse a legend in three lines in debased Nāgari characters. This is attributed by some to Rāma-Rāja of Vijayanagar on very weak grounds; and according to Bidie the legend reads (1) Śrī-Rām (2) Rāja-Rām (3) Rām Rāja, but it is difficult to find any of these words in it. This coin is also known as the "Gandikōṭa pagoda". It is supposed to have been issued by Timma Naidu, Pālegār of Gandikōṭa in the Cuddapah District. This theory is probably correct. (For figures of this coin see Elliot, figure 176; Vincent Smith, Plate XXX, figure 31; Bidie, figure 16). Another is a "Chhatrapati" coin bearing on the obverse the legend (1) Chhatra (2) pati and on the reverse the legend (1) Rāja (2) Śiva with the sun and moon (an inverted crescent) above. The legends are in two lines in Nāgari characters. This is evidently a coin of Śivāji. The remaining two coins represent the so-called Lingāyat pagoda. According to Bidie (page 41) the obverse shows a figure which may be the linga with a snake-like scroll on it, and according to Vincent Smith (page 318), an obscure device, a heart-shaped figure with projecting lines and pellet. The reverse, in the opinion of Bidie, probably represents the yōni, or linga and yōni combined. The device probably represents a conch-shell. The "snake-like scroll" looks very much like a Persian letter. (Bidie, figure 8.)

3. Manuscripts.

144. Some of the manuscripts examined while on tour during the year under report have already been briefly referred to in paras 12, 13, 17, 20 and 45. Among the works contained in the manuscripts examined, the following perhaps deserve notice:—(1) Kēraṭiya, a work on astrology by Yavanāchārya, treating of twelve bhāras such as tanu-bhāva, dhana-bhāva, bhrātri-bhāva, mātri-bhāva and so forth both in poetry and prose; (2) a commentary on Boppana-bhaṭṭiya by Māchana-sūri's son Mādhava, a resident of Munikūṭālaya; (3) Vaidya-chintāmaṇi by Vallabhēndra, son of Amarēśvarabhaṭṭa; (4) Uttarakāṇḍa-champu by Rāghava-guru of the Śrīvatsa-gōtra; (5) a commentary on Bhāgavata-champu by Akkayya-vidvān, disciple of Vallayārya and brother's son of Viśvanātha, author of Śāstradīpikā; (6) a commentary styled Kāmadōgdhri on Sūrya-siddhānta by Tammayārya, son of Mallādhvari, a resident of Parigipura, grandson of Mallayajvā and great grandson of Honnārya; (7) Bhāskara by Bhaṭṭa-Nilakanṭha, son of Mimāmsaka-Bhaṭṭa-Sankara; (8) Rājasēkhara vilāsa, a didactic prose work consisting of stories said to have been related by Rasikaśekhara, disciple of Navina-Kālidāsa, to his friend Subuddhi; (9) Jyōtishasamhitā by Vriddha-Parāśara; (10) a commentary on Śripati's Jyōtisharatnamālā by Śrīdhara; (11) Rasika-rasāyana, a work on rhetoric; (12) Rasasanjivani, a work on medicine; (13) a Telugu commentary on Jayadēva's Gītagōvinda; (14) Sarvāgama-śikhāmaṇi, a Kannada prose work containing sayings of Vīraśaiva teachers; (15) Nānārtha-gurubōdhasāra, a Kannada work on Vēdānta by Antaranga-yōgi, disciple of Parāśara-parivrājakārya, Vyāsa-bhaṭṭāraka and Mukunda-guru; (16) a Kannada commentary on Bhagavadgītā by Rāmakrishṇa; (17) Vallikaṇṭhābharana, a Kannada poem by Nandinātha; and (18) Rājanṛipa-charita, a Kannada poem in the sāṅgatyā metre giving an account of the Mysore king Rāja-Oḍeyar.

145. Of the other works examined during the year, Sanatkumāra-rāstu is a Sanskrit work bearing on architecture by Sanatkumāra. It gives rules for building houses, temples, cars, etc. The author says that he gives the essence of the works on the subject written by Brahma, Śukra, Yama, Bhārgava, Āṅgīrasa, Gautama, Gārgya, Manu, Vyāsa, Brīgu, Viśvakarma and others. Jyōtiśhasamhitānava is a Sanskrit work on astrology by Kadambēśvara, son of Viśvēśvara-mahāprasādi. The author was patronised by the king Pratāpa-Rudra-Dēva-Gajapati and had among others the title Bhaṇḍāradhūrta-kartavya. He calls himself āsthāna-mahāprasādi. Nannayjagala-chāritra is a Kannada poem in the sāṅgatyā metre, giving an account of a Vīraśaiva devotee named Nannayya, written in 1578 by the Vīraśaiva poet Parvatadēva, disciple of Virūpāksha of the Oṇṇettina-maṭha of Divyanagara. Prabhudēvara-purāṇa is likewise a Kannada poem in the shaṭpadi metre, giving an account of the Vīraśaiva teacher Prabhudēva or Allama, by the Vīraśaiva poet Hariśvara, disciple of Tōṇṭadāchārya of the Yelandūr maṭha, who lived at the close of the 17th century.

A few words may also be said here about some lithographed works noticed during the year including two or three of Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, mentioned in para 137. Bhuvanapradīpikā is a Sanskrit work written in 1808 under the patronage of this king by Rāmakrishṇa-śāstri of Hassan with a Kannada commentary by himself. It is a sort of encyclopædia giving information on a variety of subjects such as creation, time, the Manvādīs, geography, astronomy, history of Southern India and of Mysore with many details about his patron Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, the Purāṇas, duties of the four castes and religious orders, Yōga and Vēdānta. Among the Jaina kings of Tundīra-dēśa are named Satyandhara, his son Jivandhara, his son Yaśōdhara, his son Guṇapāla, his son Yaśahpāla, his son Prajāpāla, his son Lōkapāla, his descendant Himaśītala who ruled from Kali 1125 Pingala and in whose reign Akalanka vanquished the Bauddhas; then followed Harivikrama, Simhavikrama, Sataratha, Nyāyaratha and Dharmaratha whose son Chāmūṇḍa-Rāya set up Gomnāṭa, 49 cubits high, at Śravana Belgōla in Kali 600 Vibhava. In Śaka 778 Dhātu Vinayāditya-Ballāla built Yādavapuri. In Śaka 1093 Khara kings of the lunar race, known as Narapatis, built Vijayanagara. In Śaka 1258 Dhātu Mādhavārya-mantri built Vidyānagara and enthroned Bukka. On becoming a sanyāsi, he attained celebrity as Vidyāraṇya-munindra. Here we have a clear statement of the identity of Mādhavāchārya with Vidyāraṇya. Another poet, Śrinivāsa-kavisārvabhauma, who was also patronised by this king, has written several works, of which one named Krishṇanṛipa-jayōtkarsha is worthy of notice. It is in praise of his patron and composed in prose and verse in such a way that with a little alteration in punctuation it becomes either a Sanskrit or Kannada work. The works by the king himself are generally prefaced with a chārṇikā similar to the one referred to in para 137 and are profusely illustrated. Of these, Dēvatādhyāna-mālikā gives the dhyāna-ślōkas with pictures to illustrate them in each case of sixty deities such as Chāmūṇḍā, Jvalajjihvā, Mantrinī-Syāmalā, Daṇḍinī-Vārāhi, Mahākālī, Mahālakṣmi, Mahāsarasvatī, Vaśyamukhī, Bālādēvi, Śūlinīdēvi, Pratyāṅgirādēvi, Gangā, Lakṣmīhayagrīva, Lakṣmīvarāha, Śimśumāra-mūrti, Śarabha, Aghōra, Dattātrēya, Sūrya, Chandra, Manmatha and so on. Sūryachandrādi-vamśāvataraṇa, written in 1851, gives with suitable illustrations one hundred episodes each from the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata and the adventures of the royal brothers Yadu-Rāya and Krishṇa-Rāya, the progenitors of the Mysore dynasty of kings. Dēvatānāma-kusumamanjari, styled Dēvatā-shṭōttarāshṭōttara in para 137, written in 1859, gives the 108 names or descriptive epithets, not only of deities such as Viṣṇu, Śiva, Lakṣmi, Gauri, Sītā, Rukminī, Bhairava, Nandi, etc., but also of great men such as Buddha, Śankara, Rāmānuja, Madhva, Vidyāraṇya, etc., and of things such as the Mysore throne, the royal seal, weapons, Rudrāksha, etc., numbering in all 108. It may be of interest to note here the description given of the Mysore throne:—

The throne is adorned with golden plantain posts and golden mango leaves; has a bird set with jewels at the top of the shaft of the umbrella; is rendered charming by female figures at the sides of the flight of steps; has pearl tassels around the umbrella; has a tortoise seat, yālis on two sides, and creepers on four sides; has on the east face elephants, on the south horses, on the west infantry, and on the north chariots; has Brahma on the south, Śiva on the north and Viṣṇu in the middle; has Vijaya and other four lions, two śarabhas, two horses, and four swans at the angles; is beautified by figures of the regents of the directions and Nāga nymphs; is decorated with the svastika diagram and a pearl awning, and is open on all sides.

General Remarks.

146. The architectural and iconographic illustrations and notes, the publication of signed works of individual artists and the notices of newly discovered early records of historical value in these Reports continue to receive the warm appreciation of scholars in India, Europe and America. One scholar writes from England: "The grave news from France makes it difficult for me to take as much interest as usual in our favourite pursuits, but in spite of that and illness I have gone through your Report carefully and noted the main points which strike me. The Report, as usual, is full of novel and valuable matter. I observe your active progress in publications completed or in hand. Para 15, the reliefs at Belur representing the courts of Viṣṇuvardhana and his son; para 20, the unique 4-celled temple at Doddā Gaddavalli; paras 73-81, the genuine early Ganga records; paras 86-88, the Puṁnāta inscription; para 151, the new Hoysala gold coins: and there are many other things. I do not know how you find time to do so much and so thoroughly. Probably your Reports may be ranked as the best in India." Another scholar writes: "I always look forward with interest to the perusal of these valuable Reports, and the present one fully maintains the well-established reputation of your Department. The architectural and artistic descriptions are, as usual, full and definite and they will be of great value in the study of the Sanskrit Silpaśāstras, which, I am glad to know, is now seriously taken in hand. The photographs of signed sculptures are again highly welcome: two of the works, the Sarasvati by Haripa and the Vēṇugōpāla by Madhuvanna, seem to me fine. In the Epigraphical Part the inscription of Durvinita and the Māmballi Plates are, no doubt, the most important records. They continue the demonstration of the genuineness of the early Ganga inscriptions, being in full agreement with those previously known. I believe that the work of the Mysore Archaeological Department in connection with this dynasty will always be remembered to its credit." Another writes: "As usual, your Report is most interesting and instructive, and too much praise cannot be given to the beautiful and helpful illustrations." Another again writes: "The illustrations in your Report are, as usual, an outstanding feature, and as admirable as ever. Those of the Nuggihalli temples, I and V, and the figures, IV and VII, are very effective." Another writes from Scotland: "I have read your Report with great interest and profit. It is unnecessary to say more than that it equals in value its predecessors. I make instead two suggestions which may perhaps be carried out in future Reports. The first is simply to repeat the desire expressed by others for the provision of an Index. The Reports are far too valuable to be left without this indispensable aid to rapid reference. The second is the hope that in future Reports some further details may be given of manuscripts which are not already noticed in the existing Catalogues." Another writes from Denmark: "As usual, your Report contains a great store of material admirably edited and illustrated, and is a splendid record of your fine energy and scholarship. When you have done so much, it might seem unappreciative to ask for more, but I think the suggestion made by one of your correspondents that an Index to the Series should be put in hand is only a tribute to the excellence of your work, and I am sure all students of Indian art and history would be glad if you could see your way to carry out this suggestion." Another writes from Holland: "Your Report is a valuable record of scholarly work." Another writes from America: "Like its predecessor, the Report for 1916, your present Report is a very valuable and much esteemed account containing material most worthy of the careful and scholarly reproduction of plates and figures found in it."

A European scholar in India writes: "Once again I must say that your Report for the last year has fulfilled the expectations of those interested in your work. It is another gem which will be added to the Archæological Treasure with which you are enriching Mysore year after year. I have read the Report from cover to cover, and the interest has been maintained throughout. Yet, several portions have attracted my attention more particularly: such are, for instance, those relating to the temples of Dodd-Gaddavalli, whose quadruple dimensions are, as you remark, a unique feature of Hoysala Architecture, of Grama, the three fast-crumbling ones of Nuggihalli where occur rare instances of a Kâli flanked by Vaishnavi dvârapâlikas, and a Vishnu flanked by Parvati and Sarasvati, the fine Dravidian shrines of Yelandur and of Agara, the fanes at Kalale and the little known ones of portions of Kolar District. I am highly pleased also at your discovery of fresh examples of Tippu's broad-mindedness and tolerance, viz., his presents to the temples at Kalale and at Melkote of silver ritualistic vessels for worship of the gods. I was struck also with the undertone of despondency that runs throughout the pages of your Report, despondency caused by the ever to be regretted neglect by responsible officers of the Revenue and Public Works Departments of these magnificent relics of a glorious past which are slowly disappearing before our eyes through want of conservation. I feel strongly on this point and trust that something tangible will be done in the near future by the powers that be. Your discovery of the first Tamil Mâstikal that has yet been found in the State, and of Tengalai castemarks on four Prahlâdas sculptured on screens in the Kesava temple at Belur is also of far-reaching importance. Please then accept once more my heart-felt felicitations for the splendid result of another year's strenuous but at the same time highly successful work." Another scholar writes: "I congratulate you on keeping up the high standard which has won for the Mysore Archæological Department so high a repute of recent years." Another writes: "I find your Report interesting reading, particularly as you give illustrations, for I am much interested in the iconography of the Devatas for which the Dhyanas in the Tantras are so necessary. One or two of the figures have great artistic value. I am pleased to know that in Mysore as elsewhere an increased interest in the Art of this country has led to practical measures, and congratulate you on the Report for which you are responsible." A Ceylonese scholar writes: "I have read your Report with very great interest. It is a record of most excellent work, highly creditable to you and to your Government." An Indian scholar writes: "I find your Report extremely interesting, particularly the description of Lakashminarasimha and Sadasiva temples illustrated by photographs and plans. The former seems to be a splendid monument both from an architectural and artistic point of view, and I congratulate you on possessing such fine monuments in your circle."

It is pleasing to note that this year's survey has brought to light a number of artistic Hoysala structures which had not been noticed before. As a general rule Hoysala temples are built entirely of potstone; but this year instances have come under notice of such temples built either partly of granite and partly of potstone (para 38) or entirely of granite (para 40). Another noteworthy structure that has come under notice is a Dravidian temple with three cells (para 34), this feature being peculiar to Hoysala structures. A number of mâstikals characterised by certain peculiarities has been noticed in paras 12, 13, 30 and 32, though it has been possible to illustrate only one of them, that too not of a high order of merit (Plate V, 3).

In compliance with the desire expressed by some of the scholars quoted above, the preparation of an Index to the Archæological Reports has been taken in hand. It is hoped that the necessary assistance for the work will be afforded by Government.

Among the illustrations of architecture and sculpture in the present Report, Plate I gives the south view of the Îsvara temple at Arsikere, a typical specimen of Hoysala architecture. Plates VI and VII illustrate the elegant Chennakêśava temple at Araluppe and exhibit three signed images executed by Honôja, a new name not met with hitherto. Plate V illustrates the Galigêśvara temple at Heggere, a small but very fine Hoysala building, and a mâstikal. Plates II and III illustrate two Muhammadan buildings at Sira. Plate IV shows a side view of the Yôgamâdhava temple at Settikere with the metallic figure of a warrior, and Plate VIII a side view of the shrine of the goddess in the Varâhasvâmi temple at Mysore.

Plate IX exhibits three inscribed metallic images, one the processional image of the temple, the others figures of Śrivaishṇava teachers. On Plate IV is also shown the ornamental wooden doorway of a temple at Chikkanāyakanhalli. Lastly, Plate X shows the artistically executed santānāmbuja or "progeny lotus" (see para 137), giving the genealogy of the Mysore kings.

I have again to urge upon the notice of Government the urgent necessity for making early arrangements for the conservation of all the artistic structures in the State. In the interests of these noble monuments it is absolutely necessary to introduce the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act as soon as possible. A special allotment in the annual budget is also very necessary for their systematic conservation. It will be seen that one of the scholars quoted above expresses himself very feelingly on this matter.

The Tagare plates of the Ganga king Polavira (paras 73-75) are of great historical importance and form a welcome addition to the number of the genuine records of the early Ganga dynasty brought to light in my previous Reports. The Tagare plates of the Kadamba king Bhōgivarṇa are also of some historical value as mentioning two new kings of that early dynasty. The stone inscription of the Ganga king Śrīpuruṣa (para 76) is of considerable interest, as being the only lithic record, yet discovered, of that king with a Śaka date.

ANNUAL REPORT
MYSORE ARCHÆOLOGICAL
DEPARTMENT
FOR THE YEAR 1919

WITH THE GOVERNMENT REVIEW THEREON

PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT PRESS
1919

Report of the Archæological Department.

No. G. 16394-5—G. M. 128-19-2, DATED 17TH JANUARY 1920.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF HIS HIGHNESS
THE MAHARAJA OF MYSORE.

GENERAL AND REVENUE DEPARTMENTS.

READ—

The Report of the Director of Archæological Researches in Mysore on the progress made in the Archæological Survey of Mysore for the year ending 30th June 1919.

Order No. G. 16394-5—G. M. 128-19-2, dated 17th January 1920.

Recorded.

2. The Director made short tours in the months of January, February and May 1919 in Bangalore, Tumkur and Mysore Districts, with the object of making a re-survey of portions of these districts and of inspecting some temples of archæological interest. He inspected 102 villages and examined 180 new records.

3. Work at Headquarters.—The work done at headquarters is given in detail in paragraphs 43—59 of the report. One hundred and eighty-eight records were copied during the year. A set of copper plates received from the Agent of the Paradesi-swami Matha at Keregodi Rangapura, Tiptur Taluk, is of some historical value, as it records a grant by a Ganga King, Rajamalla II, to a Saiva Teacher of the name of Netra Siva in the 9th Century.

Two monographs, one on the Kesava temple at Belur and the other on the Lakshmi Devi temple at Dodd-Gaddavalli Nos. II and III of “Architecture and Sculpture in Mysore” in the Mysore Archæological Series, were printed during the year. The translations of the Kannada texts of the revised edition of the Sravana-belagola volume and the General Index to the volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica made some progress during the year.

About 200 photographs of views of temples of artistic merit were prepared and sent to the Deputy Commissioners of Hassan and Kadur for sale to the public. About 45 photographs were sold in the Archæological Office. Forty copies of the Monograph on the Kesava temple were also sold during the year.

4. The report was received late, though proposals for the additional quantity of diacritical and accented type were sanctioned with the object of facilitating the work of printing it in the Government Press. The Superintendent, Government Printing, is requested to make proper arrangements for the timely printing of the reports in future.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF MYSORE.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR ENDING 30TH JUNE 1919.

PART I.—WORK OF THE DEPARTMENT.

Establishment.

By Government Order No. G. 27—G. M. 177-17-20, dated the 2nd July 1918, Dr. A. Venkatasubbaiya was allowed to continue to work as my Assistant, and by Government Order No. G. Camp 5—G. M. 1-18-20, dated the 3rd May 1919, he was directed to rejoin duty on return from leave. He rejoined duty on the 12th May 1919.

2. According to Government Order No. G. 12984-5—G. M. 320-17-6, dated the 2nd January 1919, the personal allowance of Mr. T. Namassivayam Pillai, the Photographer and Draughtsman of my office, was raised from Rs. 5 to Rs. 30 per mensem.

3. In Government Order No. G. 7340-1—G. M. 95-18-2, dated the 10th October 1918, sanction was accorded to the retirement of Pandit A. Anandālvār, the senior copyist of my office, with effect from the 16th September 1918.

4. In their Order No. G. 7338-9—G. M. 87-18-6, dated the 10th October 1918, Government sanctioned the confirmation of S. Bommarasa Pandit and Pandit N. Nanjunda Sastri as Head Clerk and Kannada Clerk respectively of my office.

5. In Government Order No. G. 26552-3—G. M. 87-18-23, dated the 27th May 1919, sanction was accorded to the continuance of the temporary establishment for the Archæological office for a further period of one year from the 1st July 1919.

6. In their Order No. G. 11757-9—Education 148-18-39, dated the 31st May 1919, Government directed the transfer of the services of the copyists working in the Oriental Library to the Archæological Department.

7. Abdul Rahiman, Assistant to the Photographer of my office, was allowed to retire from service under Article 327 of the Mysore Service Regulations with effect from the 17th May 1919.

8. By Government Order No. G. 27474-7—G. M. 38-18-21, dated the 6th June 1919, the deputation of Mr. M. A. Narayana Iyengar, M.A., B.L., Maharani's College, Mysore, for a period of six months, was sanctioned for assisting me in the revision of the historical portion of the Mysore Gazetteer.

9. Dr. A. Venkatasubbiya had privilege leave for 27 days and leave without allowances for nearly 7 months. Mr. Rama Rao had privilege leave for 29 days. M. V. Srirangachar had leave without allowances for 2½ months and resigned the appointment on the 16th September 1918. Pandit Venkannachar had privilege leave for nearly 2½ months; A. Sesha Iyengar for nearly 1½ months; Pandit Anandalvar for 16 days; N. Nanjunda Sastri for 14 days; and M. A. Ramanuja Iyengar for 12 days.

Tours: Exploration, Inspection of Temples, etc.

10. Pressure of work at headquarters did not admit of my undertaking long tours during the year under report. Short tours were, however, made in the Bangalore, Tumkur and Mysore Districts in January, February and May 1919 with the object of making a resurvey of portions of the abovementioned districts and of inspecting a few temples of archæological interest. The resurvey has resulted in the discovery of about 180 new records including a number of copper plates and sanads, and of a few artistic structures not noticed before. I left Bangalore for Ānekal on the 20th January 1919.

11. Ānekal has several temples, of which the Chennakêśava is probably the oldest. It is a fine structure facing east with a mahādvāra or outer gate to the south. The navaranga or central hall has four sculptured pillars supporting a ceiling carved with a lotus bud. The sculptures on the pillars illustrate the stories of several of the ten incarnations of Vishṇu such as the Narasimha, the Krishna and the Vāmana. Among other noticeable carvings are a figure of Vishṇu with fourteen hands and a large conch-shell. In the sukhandsi or vestibule are kept two sets of utsava-vigrahas or processional images, a figure of Hanumān and three stone figures of Ālvārs or Śrīvaiṣṇava saints. The god of the temple is said to have been set up by the Pāṇḍava prince Arjuna. The outer walls are decorated with pilasters and three niches surmounted by small gōpurās or turrets on the three sides of the garbhagriha or adytum. There is a figure of Hanumān to the right of the mahādvāra. The Amritamallikārjuna temple is a pretty large building facing east with a mahādvāra and a good dīpa-stambha or lamp-pillar in front. The pillar, about 20 feet high, stands on a raised pedestal, about 5 feet high, and has on the west face Gaṇapati, on the north Virabhadra, on the south Nandi, and on the east a four-armed figure, about 2½ feet high, of Śiva standing on a chariot, the upper hands holding an axe and an antelope, the lower a bow and an arrow. The Śiva figure is rather peculiar: it is perhaps intended to represent that god as the destroyer of the Tripura demons. The lintel of the sukhandsi doorway shows a linga flanked by elephants instead of the usual Gajalakshmi. To the north of the temple in the prākāra or enclosure is the shrine of the goddess. The Bhavānīśankara temple, said to have been erected by one Annadānappa about 200 years ago, has three cells standing in a line, the central one having a linga known as Bhavānīśankara, the north a good figure of Pārvati and the south a linga called Nanjunḍêśvara said to have been set up some 50 years ago. The central cell has also the processional image together with a standing figure of Gaṇapati and the astra-dēvate, i.e., a trident standing on a pedestal. In the south cell are also kept the processional images of the Amritamallikārjuna and the ruined Gangādhārêśvara temples, the former being what is known as Sômaskanda-mūrti, consisting of the group Śiva, Pārvati and child Skanda or Subrahmanya (Plate II, 1), and the latter Umāmahêśvara. The centre of the navaranga is paved with a smooth stone slab, measuring 6½ feet by 3½ feet, which is said to be the stone cot used by a former chief of the place. It is semi-circular at one end and is carved with two parrots. It is said that its four ornamental legs are buried in the ground. The navaranga has also pretty good figures of Gaṇapati, Chaṇḍêśvara, Lakshminārāyaṇa and Sūrya. There is likewise a rude standing figure in a niche with folded hands, which probably represents the founder of the temple. The short lamp-pillar in front has Indra on the east face, Nandi on the south, Gaṇapati on the west and a lotus on the north. In a shrine in the enclosure is a good marble figure of Śankarāchārya, recently set up.

12. The Vēṇugōpāla temple is said to have been founded about 100 years ago by Raghupataiya, a high officer under a former chief of the place. The god, about 3 feet high, is flanked by consorts. Raghupataiya is also said to have founded the agrahāra (or rent-free Brāhmin village) Kammasandra, about 2½ miles from Ānekal, and to have erected the Rāma and Śiva temples there which have now gone to ruin. The Dharmarāja temple enshrines colored wooden figures of the Pāṇḍava brothers and their consort Draupadi. There is also a stone figure, about 1 foot high, of Dharmarāja, seated in lalitāsana or with one leg dangling, holding a gadā or mace in the right hand, the other hand being placed on the thigh. The processional images are metallic figures of Arjuna and Draupadi, the former armed with a bow, an arrow and a quiver. In front of the temple is a small shrine containing a standing figure, about 3 feet high, of Pōtalarāju, holding a sword in the uplifted right hand and a dagger in the left. In the prākāra is a miniature Muhammadan tomb newly set up with a panjā or metal hand. The meaning of this is not clear. The annual festival takes place in the month of Chaitra (April), and in the procession Draupadi has precedence over the others. Dharmarāja is not taken out. Outside the temple at some distance is a circular mud embankment, said to represent Saindhava who treacherously killed Abhimanyu in the Mahābhārata war, and during the festival a huge head is fixed on the embankment and cut off. Sham fights also take place during the festival in imitation of the battle in which Abhinanyu was killed. The Timmarāyasvāmi temple, situated at a distance of about a mile from Ānekal, has been recently renovated with the materials of the ruined Venkaṭaramaṇasvāmi temple at Halehalli. So, the inscription EC, IX, Ānekal 46 of Halehalli is now here. The god is what is known as udbhava-mūrti, an upright round stone said to be of the shape of a serpent (śeṣhākāra) and supposed to have emerged from an anthill (valmikōdbhava). We have the usual tradition that the god revealed himself in a dream to a chief of the place and that the dropping of milk by a cow led to the discovery of the god. The car festival takes place on a grand scale in Chaitra (April) every year, at which about 10,000 people are said to collect together. There are several maṇṭapas and other buildings to accommodate pilgrims during the festival. Behind the temple is a neat little shrine once dedicated to Nārāyaṇa, but now containing a figure of Hanumān.

13. To the south of Ānekal is what looks like the site of an ancient city, now known as Śāsanada-bīḍu (the inscription plain) and būḍi-hola (the ash field). It is full of ashes, bones, and pieces of old pottery with various kinds of ornamentation. The pottery mostly resembles that found on the Chandravalli site at Chitaldrug (see Report for 1909, para 12). A few old bricks and neolithic celts were also picked up on the site. No information is available about the city which once stood here. The site is now being dug up for the ashes which are carted away for being used as manure for the fields. Two new inscriptions, one Tamil and one Kannaḍa, were found here. EC, IX, Ānekal 48 was also correctly copied. While at Ānekal I examined nearly 250 palm leaf manuscripts in the private libraries of Messrs. Nanjundabhatta, Manuscripts. Sivarama Sastri (senior), Sivarama Sastri (junior) and Sitarama Sastri. Most of the works contained in the manuscripts are printed. Besides works of general literature such as poems and dramas, the manuscripts were found to contain works bearing on astrology, ritual, medicine, rhetoric, grammar, dharma-śāstra and vratas or observances. There are also Rik and Yajus samhitās, pada-pāṭhas, several Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads, Śrauta grihya- and dharma-sūtras, itihāsas and purāṇas, and commentaries on the Brahma-sūtras, śrīṭis, poems, dramas and rhetorical works.

14. Vaṇakanhalli is named Vaṇakkarpattāṇam in the Tamil inscriptions of the place. Three new Tamil epigraphs were copied here. Places in Ānekal Taluk. One of them refers to a boar-hunt and the slab on which Vaṇakanhalli. it is incised has at the top a boar which is attacked by two dogs both in front and behind. Jigaṇi has a large tank with a sluice in the form of a lofty four-pillared maṇṭapa. The village is called Śuguni in the Tamil records. The inscriptions

Ānekal 76 and 77 here are fragmentary Ganga records not connected with each other. Number 76 is in the ruined house of Siddhanti Subrahmanya Sastri, a former Kannada Pandit of the Madras Presidency College and a famous commentator of several Kannada works. The Varadarāja temple at the village appears to be an old structure. The Chennakēśava temple at Hāragadde, known as Pāraṅgaṇi in

Hāragadde. the Tamil epigraphs, is a pretty large Dravidian building. The god, about 5 feet high, is a good figure flanked by consorts, all the three standing on a large well-executed gōmukha (or a stone platter with a spout resembling a cow's face). In the navaranga is a seated figure, about 3½ feet high with pedestal, of Vishvaksēna. Four new Tamil inscriptions were Lakshma. copied at the temple. The Kannada poet Lakshma, the author of a Bhārata, Rukmāṅgadacharite and other works, was a native of this village and a devotee of this god. In his works, which are all dedicated to this god, the village is named Khagapuri. Tradition has it that though illiterate he acquired poetical skill by the grace of Vishvaksēna mentioned above. He flourished in the first half of the 18th century and the present officiating priests of the temple are his lineal descendants. A new inscription was discovered at Sōlūr, another at Sabbamangala, and two more, of which one is Tamil, at Halehalli.

15. Sarjāpura with some villages in the neighbourhood was granted as a jāgīr to Hāfiz Muhammad Khān during the time of Aurangazib. Sarjāpura. It is said to have been subsequently resumed during the time of Divān Pūrṇaiya. No local Muhammadan was able to give me definite information about either the jāgir or the Jāgirdār. Gulām Husēn Khān, a lineal descendant of the Jāgirdār, is said to have some old sanads with him. But this individual is not a resident of the village. The ruined Chennakēśava temple in the fort must have been a very good building judging from the sculptures on its outer walls which illustrate the stories of the Narasimha, Krishna and other incarnations of Vishnu. From an inscription newly discovered in the temple it appears to have been erected by the Sugatūr chief Tamme-Gauḍa in about 1526 during the reign of the Vijayanagar king Krishna-Dēva-Rāya. The sculptures have been

A temple converted into a Muhammadan shrine. defaced or chiselled out. The Jāgirdār is said to have erected a structure over the temple for enshrining a hair of Muhammad's mustache (āsāre sharīf). The walls of the structure are still to be seen. The eastern portion of the temple has now become the dwelling place of some Muhammadan, and the western portion adorned with several sculptured pillars is used as a latrine by the residents in the neighbourhood. To the north-west of the village are the tombs of the Jāgirdār and his wife and an annual urs or festival takes place in their honor in the month of Moharram. The Mahābilvēśvara temple, recently renovated, has three cells standing in a line enshrining a linga, Gaṇapati and Pārvati. The navaranga has figures of Sūrya, Varadarāja, Hanumān and Chaṇḍikēśvara. The Kōḍaṇḍarāma temple has likewise three cells standing in a line : the middle cell has a good figure, about 4 feet high, of Rāma together with those of Lakshmaṇa and Sitā ; the right cell Hanumān, said to have been set up by Vyāsa ; and the left cell is vacant. Ramacharya, the archaka of the temple, produced some old papers in his possession. One of them is an order issued in 1833 by Fauzdār Bāpūrāya to Āmil Śēshaiya telling him that a grant of 3 varahas has been made to the archaka of the temple, and asking him to pay him every day 8 pies out of the customs duties for the purchase of camphor and incense. Another records a stipulation in 1803 by the weavers that they would pay to the temple one pie for every cloth manufactured by them. The archaka also showed me some manuscripts bearing on the Vaikhānasāgama.

16. Another Śiva temple in the village has a seated figure of the goddess Annapūrnā behind the linga. The goddess has four hands, the upper ones bearing lotuses and the lower holding a ladle between them. The Paṭālamma temple, which had once a colored stucco figure of the goddess, is now empty, the goddess having been mutilated by the Muhammadans. The people said that owing to the fear of constant mutilation no new goddess was set up. The Māri shrine to the left of the Paṭālamma temple contains eight stone heads out of the usual nine, one having been broken by the Muhammadans. The village has also a maṭha known as Sambappa's maṭha, which contains the gaddige or tomb of Sambappa, a great

A Panchama teacher. Panchama teacher. This maṭha is a branch of the original maṭha which is at Āldūr in the Chāmarājanagar Taluk of the Mysore District. Sambappa was a pious Panchama who is credited with the performance of many miracles. He has many disciples among the Panchamas and others in several parts of the State. In front of the gaddige stand two slabs sculptured in the lower half with figures of Śaiva dvārapālakas or doorkeepers. In the upper portion one of the slabs has Virabhadra, while the other shows a tree with monkeys and birds on it, and a bull in front of which stands a man with the right hand raised and the left, armed with a dagger, caught with one of the forelegs by the bull. The meaning of this is not clear. Mādaiya, a descendant of Sambappa, who is in charge of the maṭha, produced a copper plate inscription in Nāgari characters of the Vijayanagar king Venkatapati-Rāya I, dated 1602. He is under the impression that the record gives an account of the miracles performed by his ancestor Sambappa and has been showing it to the disciples of the maṭha as his authority for collecting contributions from them. The inscription, however, registers a grant by the king to a Śrivaishṇava Brāhman named Rāmāchārya. Mādaiya also showed me some papers relating to the maṭha, which describe the greatness of Sambappa and enjoin the payment of certain contributions to the maṭha. The Sanads. Shekdar of Sarjāpura, Saiyad Abdul Razak, produced a sanad issued in 1800 to his great grandfather by Pūrnaiya.

Kāsi Subbanna, Shanbhog of Sarjāpura, has in his possession three sanads—one, dated A. H. 1184, issued by Jāgirdār Hāfiz Muhammad Khān, and two, dated 1812 and 1820, issued by Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III of Mysore. He has also a Persian letter, a copy, dated 1855, attested by Cowper, Under Secretary to the Government of India with the Governor-General. Four new epigraphs were discovered in the village. Dommasandra is a large village containing two Government and two Mission Schools. It has also a Reading Room. There are nearly 200 families of weavers and good female cloths are said to be manufactured in the village. A new inscription was copied here.

17. Hoskôṭe is so named because the fort in it was newly built about the close of the 15th century by the Sugatūr chief Tamme-Gauḍa. It has one of the largest tanks in the State, about 10 miles in circumference when full. The Avimuktêśvara temple is a large Dravidian structure, said to have been founded by the above-mentioned Tamme-Gauḍa. It has three cells standing in a line, the middle cell enshrining a figure of Vîrabhadra, the right cell a linga and the left Pârvati. The processional image, said to have been recently prepared, bears an inscription on the pedestal which merely gives the name of the god. Of the noticeable figures in the navaranga are a two-armed Gaṇapati and a two-armed Subrahmaṇya. The latter has only one face and bears in the right hand the weapon śakti, the left hand being placed on the waist. His vehicle, the peacock, is shown at the back. In front of the temple stands a fine dîpa-stambha or lamp-pillar (Plate III) somewhat resembling those at the Hariharêśvara temple at Harihar (Report for 1912, para 40). It is about 25 feet high with pedestal and is built of 22 circular discs, the alternate ones jutting out in the four directions so as to allow lamps being placed on the protuberances which number 44 in all and are carved with floral or geometrical designs on the upper surface. It has on the east face a trident, on the south a linga, on the west a drum and on the north a lotus. On a pillar to the left in the mukha--maṇṭapa or front hall is carved a standing figure, about 1 foot high, wearing a gôṭu or cloak and leaning on a staff, which is said to represent the chief Tamme-Gauḍa. A similar figure is also found on one of the pillars of the kalyāṇa-maṇṭapa of the same temple. These figures are very much like the figures of Kempe-Gauḍa found at Mâgaḍi and other places (Report for 1915, para 11; last year's Report, para 14). ✕The Vîthalêśvara temple has also three cells standing in a line. The middle cell has a good figure, about 3 feet high, of Viṭhala, flanked by consorts (Plate II, 2). The god stands with his two hands placed on the waist. The right cell has good figures of Garuḍa and Gaṇapati and the left a good figure of Hanumân. From the records in the possession of Viṭhalêśvara Subbaraya, the hereditary archaka of the temple, we learn that it was founded about the middle of the 17th century by Raghunâtha Bâvâji, Subedar of Hoskôṭe-paragaṇâ, at the instance of the Pêshwa. The images seem to have been sent from Poona with the Brâhman Mudgal-bhaṭṭa, who became the first archaka of the temple. The village Turugalûr of the revenue-value of 42½ varahas in the Mâlûr Taluk was granted for the upkeep of the temple. Among the old papers produced by the present archaka are a sanad issued by Pûrṇaiya in 1800; another issued by Lingarâjayya-arasu, Fauzdâr of Bangalore, in 1815; and a third issued by Divân Venkaṭe-arasu in 1830; two issued by Raghunâtha-Bâvâji in about 1760, one addressed to archaka Râma-bhaṭṭa, son of Mudgal-bhaṭṭa, and the other addressed to the Dêsapâṇḍes and other officials of the Paragaṇâ; and two issued by merchants and officials in 1772 granting certain dues to the temple.

18. There are two Ânjanêya temples in the town known as the Kôṭe Ânjanêya and the Agraḥâra Ânjanêya. The former is a small but neat building with an ornamental plinth and a porch supported by four sculptured pillars, the middle ones adorned with lions and riders and the end ones with a fine pilaster each cut out of the block. The other temple, which appears to have been recently renovated, has in the navaranga four beautifully carved black stone pillars which, judging from the sculptures on them, seem to have originally belonged to some ornate Siva temple of the Dravidian style. Two of them are shown on Plate IV. The workmanship is of a superior kind, though the pillars differ from one another in design. The south-east and north-east pillars are mostly similar, both having a pilaster standing on an elephant and a yâli in the one case and on a seated lion in the other. The former has attached to it on the east a plain round column, 4½ feet high and 8 inches in diameter, which, it is said, could be turned round if the bottom, now buried a few inches in the ground, was set free. There are old people in the town who say that they have turned it round. The south-west pillar has likewise a pilaster resting on a standing lion, and the north-west pillar is adorned with three pilasters carved out of one block. The capitals appear to be made of granite, and only one of them, that on the south-west pillar, is sculptured. The sculptures are a gaṇḍa-bhêruṇḍa with a human body holding elephants in the beaks and claws on the east face and Vyâghrapâda worshipping a linga decorated with fine creeper work on the west. Among other sculptures on the pillars may be mentioned a huntress armed with a bow and an arrow getting a thorn taken out of the leg, Tâṇḍavêśvara with Vishṇu as a drummer and Brahma and Subrahmanya as attendant musicians, Narasinha as a drummer, Kânṇappa kicking a linga, Yama seizing Mârkaṇḍêya, Bhairava resting his right hand on a basket borne on the head of a dwarf and receiving what looks like some eatable from a woman, and Śiva spiking some one with the prongs of his trident and touching the head of another. The Varadarâja temple is said to have been renovated in about 1830 by Bîligirirâv, a former Amildar of Hoskôṭe and a member of the Hebbâr Śrivaishṇava community. It is also stated that he built the Âñjanêya temple near the tank sluice.

19. A portion of the fort appears to represent the site of an ancient city. It abounds in ashes and old pottery, the latter probably not so old as that at Ânekal (para 12). Most of the land here now belongs to Sinappa, Shanbhog of Hoskôṭe, who has allowed the earth which is full of ashes at a depth of about 2 or 3 feet to be removed for being used as manure. The fort was full of houses once, though deserted at present, but the pottery in question is certainly older than the time of Tamme-Gauḍa who built the fort in about 1500. We are therefore led to the inference that the place is the site of an older city. Sinappa says that excavations conducted by him for levelling the land disclosed some stone foundations and earthen pipes plastered over with chunam which had apparently been used for conveying water, as also mud pillars enclosed with sand. There are two Lingâyat maṭhas known as Chilume-

Lingâyat maṭhas. maṭha and Virattayya's maṭha, the latter about a mile from the town. Both are stone structures more or less in a ruinous condition. The former is so called because it has close to it a perennial spring (chilume) in the form of a well which supplies good drinking water to the eastern portion of the town. It has also another empty well faced with rough slabs. The other maṭha is a large building with several sculptured pillars, one of the sculptures being a figure of Tamme-Gauḍa (see para 16), who is said to have built the structure. In front of the entrance is lying half buried a well dressed stone slab, about 6½ feet by 4 feet, with bevelled edges decorated with scroll work, which is very probably a cot with the legs buried in the ground. But people say that it was used to heap cooked rice on for distribution among the poor who visited the maṭha. Behind the building is a fine well faced with dressed stone slabs on all the sides with a shallow stone trough near it. In Nandârâma Sing's

Mâstikals. grove near the town are a few mâstikals which differ in some respects from similar memorials in other parts of the State. One of them (Plate V, 1) shows the husband armed with daggers in both the hands, the right hand being raised; while the wife holds in the left hand a water-vessel resembling a flask instead of the usual giṇḍi or spouted vessel, the right hand being placed on the belly. Another in the Municipal garden (Plate V, 2) shows a warrior and his two wives, both of whom appear to have become satis. The warrior is represented as wearing a beard and a top-knot (gonḍe). He holds a dagger in the right hand, the other being placed on the belly. The wife to the right holds a flower in the right hand and a flask in the left, while the one to the left bears a mirror in the left hand and what looks like a thunderbolt in the right, flames being shown as issuing from her head. There are also two smaller figures with folded hands on either side of this wife, which apparently represent her children. A third near Bendigânhalli, though at some distance from the town, may also be noticed here. Here, too, we have a warrior and his two wives. He holds a dagger in his right hand with the point turned to the ground. The wife to the left bears a flask in the left hand and a mirror in the right, while the other wife holds a mirror in the left hand and a lime in the right.

20. In the Municipal garden which has a small neat structure in the middle is collected together a number of sculptures brought from some ruined temples. They consist of a number of Nandis and figures of Vishṇu, Virabhadra Ganapati and Saptamâtrikâh or the seven mothers. The mâstikal here has already been noticed in the previous para.

SOUTH-WEST PILLAR IN NAVARANGA

SOUTH-EAST PILLAR IN NAVARANGA

There is also lying here the lower part of a huge millstone, about 5 feet in diameter and 1½ feet thick, resembling those on the hill at Chitaldrug (see Report for 1909, para 15). To the north of the town is a fine idgā, now mostly gone to ruin. An inscription was found close

Muhammādan buildings. to it. In a garden known as Khāji's grove to the east of the town is an ornamental plaster structure raised on a stone plinth, which is popularly called Khāji's dargā (Plate VI, 1). The name of the Khāji is given as Sāballi Sāb and he is said to have died more than 200 years ago. Another ornamental structure, though in a ruinous condition, is Latīf Shāh's dargā, popularly known as Khāsim Sāb's makān, situated near the old mosque in the east. The fine gumbaz (Plate VI, 2) situated to the north of the Varadarāja temple is said to represent the tomb of another Khāji, a predecessor of the above-mentioned Sāballi Sāb, who lived like a hermit in a stone maṇṭapa in the midst of a garden. The maṇṭapa is still to be seen near the gumbaz. A new Tamil inscription was found near the Pēṭe Ānjanēya temple. The Travellers' Bungalow at Hoskōṭe appears to be one of the oldest of modern buildings, having been erected in 1857. The palm leaf manuscripts in the possession of Manuscripts. Vithalesvara Subbaraya were examined. They were more than a hundred in number; but with the exception of a few all the works contained in them were found to be printed. The works mostly bear on astrology, medicine, prayōga and sṭhala-purāṇa. There are also commentaries on several poems, dramas and works on rhetoric.

21. The Sōmēśvara temple at Hasigāḷa is an old building, probably of the Chōḷa period. It has two cells, one containing the linga facing east and the other a figure of Virabhadra facing north. The lintel of the sukhanāsi doorway of the Sōmēśvara cell has Tāṇḍavēśvara, and the jambs dancing male and female figures, some of which are shown in rather queer postures. At the sides are perforated screens of considerable breadth with holes of the shape of the leaves of the sacred fig tree. The outer walls of the garbhagriha of the same cell have a row of sculptures all round: the south wall shows the dance of Śiva with attendant musicians; the west wall illustrates the story of the Narasimha incarnation of Viṣṇu; there are besides two curious sculptures here—a peacock with the head of a cobra and facing it a cobra with the head of a peacock; and the north wall depicts a few līlās or sports of Śiva, such as the killing of Gajāśura, etc. The god in the Venkaṭa-

Lakkoṇḍanhalli. ramāṇa temple at Lakkoṇḍanhalli is said to have been set up by Paraśurāma. The inscription EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 113 at the temple was completely copied. Tiruvengāḍa-bhatta, the archaka of the temple, produced some palm leaf manuscripts bearing on the Pāṇcharātrāgama. The Rāma temple at Hiṇḍiganāḷu, recently renovated, is a trikūṭāchala, i.e., has three cells. The main cell facing north has a brīṇḍāvana with Kēśava flanked by consorts sculptured on the front face; the east cell has Hanumān, the original god of the temple; and the west cell Rāma, Lakshmaṇa and Sītā set up about 50 years ago. The temple has a vehicle known as Chitragōpura-vāhana (Report for 1914, para 25; and Plate VI, 3) adorned with painted wooden images. In a grove to the north of the village is a māstikal carved with the figures of a warrior and his two wives. The warrior is represented as bearing a quiver on the back and shooting arrows. One of the wives has a flask in her left hand, the other hand being placed across the body; while the other holds a lotus with stalk in the right hand, the other hand hanging by the side. It is not known if the difference in the attributes has any significance. May it be that the wife holding the flask became a sati and the other did not? A new inscription was copied at the village. A

Banahalli. small ruined temple at Banahalli has besides Sapta-mātrikāḥ and Gaṇapati a seated figure of Dakṣiṇā-mūrti with four hands, the upper two holding a drum and a trident, and the lower a vinā or lute. There is also a curious two-armed seated figure holding what look like a noose and a whip, with two horses on the pedestal, one with a saddle and the other without it. May this represent Rēvanta? An old Nolamba record was copied near the village. Nandagūḍi is said to represent the site of a very old

Nandagūḍi. city. It is named Nandugūḷi or Nanjugūḷi in the Kannada, and Nonḍaṅgūḷi in the Tamil, epigraphs. The modern name Nandagūḍi appears to be responsible for the story of the Nandas given in Mysore II, page 73, in connection with the village. In the name Nanjuguli there may be a reference to the supposed poison-well (nanju, poison and kuḷi or guḷi, a pit) in the Dharmêśvara temple at Koṇḍarhalli (see next para). Two new records were discovered here. A few Kannada manuscripts in the possession of Chikkamallappa of this village were examined and found to contain only some Yakshagānas or rustic dramas. To the east of the village is a small hill named Rāgularāśi (a heap of rāgi) and to the west another known as Addabettā. Tradition has it that the former once represented the heap of rāgi and the latter the stack of straw belonging to a raiyat and that when his wife looked on the heap and sighed with sadness at the prospect of her having to grind such a large quantity both were metamorphosed into their present form. It is stated that Addabettā had on it at one time the palace of an ancient king. Rāgularāśi is made up of laterite of a mixture of red and white. A temple excavated in it has now gone to ruin.

22. The Dharmêśvara temple at Koṇḍarhalli is a small but neat old Dravidian structure, perhaps of the Chōla period. In the prākāra is an inscription of the Chōla king Rājamahēndra, of about 1065 (Hoskōte 36). According to tradition and Hoskōte 34 of 1410 the linga was set up by the Pāṇḍava prince Dharmarāja. The temple faces south, though the linga faces east. There is a perforated window in the wall opposite the linga. There are three cells in a line: the middle cell with a sukhanāsi has the linga, the left cell Pārṇvati and the right Gaṇapati. To the right of the sukhanāsi entrance stands Durgā, about 2½ feet high, the upper hands bearing a discus and a conch and the lower right a sword, while the lower left rests on the waist; and to the left Bhairava, about 3½ feet high, the upper hands holding a skull and a drum, while the lower are like those of Durgā. The navaranga is supported by four well carved pillars consisting on one side of a pilaster standing on a lion and on the other of a lion standing on a yāli. The south-east and south-west pillars have some interesting sculptures relating to the Pāṇḍava princes. The east face of the south-east pillar shows on the bottom panel Dharmarāja talking to a Yaksha seated on the top of a tree; on the middle Bhīma and Arjuna; and on the top Nakula and Sahadēva; while the south face of the same pillar shows on the bottom panel Dharmarāja standing in front of a linga canopied by the hood of a cobra, representing perhaps the consecration by him of the linga; on the middle a well, said to be the poison well made by Duryōdhana for destroying the Pāṇḍavas, with three figures, Arjuna Nakula and Sahadēva, lying across above it, perhaps representing them as being in a swoon or as dead on tasting the water of the poison well, and a figure, Dharmarāja, standing close by; and on the top Bhīma lying on a bed either unconscious or dead. The reference is evidently to the story of the pond and the questions of the Yaksha related in the Bhārata, which tradition has localised here with the addition of a poison well and the setting up of a linga over it (nanju-guḷi, see previous para). The south face of the south-west pillar shows on the bottom panel two rishis with a fire between them; on the middle a seated figure, apparently Dharmarāja, with a rishi standing in front; and on the top a deer with araṇi (or wood used for kindling a fire) in the mouth; and the west face of the same pillar shows on the bottom panel two men armed with bows; on the middle one of the men shooting into the sky; and on the top a man shooting what looks like a crocodile. The reference here is apparently to the Bhārata story of the stealing of the araṇi. This episode has also been localised here by tradition. The north-east pillar illustrates on the east face the story of Mārkaṇḍēya and on the north face the story of the hunter Kaṇṇappa. The top panel of the north face has also an elephant worshipping a linga. The sculptures on the north-west pillar have no special interest: they consist of a dancing female figure and so forth. The navaranga has a large flat ceiling, about 7 feet square, with a lotus in the centre and figures of the aṣṭa-dīkṣālakas or regents of the directions around. One of the sculptures on a pillar of the porch deserves notice: a man on a tree is bending over a linga below, while a lion below is trying to climb the tree. It is not clear if this is intended to illustrate any Purāṇic story. A new Tamil epigraph was discovered in a field to the east of the temple.

23. Hosahalli has a ruined Chaudêśvari temple containing figures of Saptamātṛikāh and Gaṇapati. There are also two māstikals in the village. One of them shows a couple, the husband holding a sword and a dagger in his uplifted hands, and the wife bearing a flask in the right hand and what looks like a mirror in the left. The other shows on the lower panel two warriors armed with daggers fighting with each other, and on the upper a couple with folded hands in front of a figure of Vishnu. Two new inscriptions were copied here. Vāgaṭa appears to have been a place of considerable importance at one time. It is named Ovattam and Varadarāja-chaturvēdi-mangalam

in the Tamil, and Ogatta and Bhāgīrathipura in the Kan-
naḍa, inscriptions of the place. In later literature it is known as Yōgavatapuri or Yōgapuri. The Varadarāja temple here is an old Dravidian structure. The inscriptions take it back to the 13th century, but it is much earlier. A painted wooden vehicle, Hanumata-vāhana, of the temple has two chōpḍārs or mace-bearers standing at the sides. In the sukhanāsi of the Chandramaulīśvara temple is kept a four-armed figure, about 3½ feet high, of Pārvati, bearing in the upper hands a noose and an elephant-goad, the lower hands being in the abhaya (or fear-removing) and varada (or boon-conferring) attitudes. Here is also kept the processional image, about 1½ feet high, of the Chaudēsvari temple, a standing figure with the usual attributes a trident, a drum, a sword and a cup. The Anjanēya temple, recently renovated, has a good figure, about 7 feet high, of the god. The Chaudēsvari temple, situated to the north-east of the village, has Saptamātrikāh, Ganapati and a few other curious figures. Among the latter are a Vēṭāla in the form of a skeleton; a seated four-armed male figure holding in the upper hands some small indistinct things, the lower right hand being in the chin-mudrā or teaching pose and the lower left resting on the thigh; and another seated male figure bearing a lotus in the right hand, the left hand being placed on the thigh. The semi-circular top piece of the tōraṇa-gamba or gate in front of the temple bears an inscription, dated 1028, of Rājendra-Chōla and some sculptures on both sides which are of some interest as illustrating the art of that period. The front face has Gajalakshmi in the middle flanked on the right by a bull and a lion and on the left by a bird with the head of an elephant and a lion. On the back is the inscription referred to above with the celestial cow or Kāmadhēnu with a human head to the right and a seated lion to the left. Nine new records were discovered at the village. Also one each at Kāmarasanhalli, Karibiranhosahalli, Bommanbanḍe, Paramanhalli, Chikkonḍahalli, Siddanhalli and Nimkāypura.

24. At Khāji-Hosahalli a fine old inscription of about the 7th century, referring Khāji-Hosahalli. itself to the rule of a chief named Binayāditya, was discovered. The characters are beautifully engraved. The village has a Lingāyat maṭha containing the gaddige or tomb of a Vīraśaiva teacher of the name of Nijagūṇa-Sujñānamūrti, who was the guru or spiritual preceptor of the Sugatūr chief Tamme-Gauḍa. A copper plate inscription in the possession of the archaka of the gaddige was copied. It records the grant of a village to the above-mentioned guru in 1494 by Tamme-Gauḍa. Two new records were copied at Kāṭi-

gēnhalli. One of the inscribed stones has at the top a big boar attacked by three dogs, in front, behind and on the back (see para 13). The inscription evidently refers to a boar-hunt, but unfortunately only a few letters are legible. The village has a makān containing the tombs of the three valis Ināyat Shāh, Sādat Shāh and Rahimān Shāh. Saiyad Ismail Shah, the fakīr in charge of the makān, produced a number of Persian and Mahrāṭhi sanads issued in favor of the makān by the Mughal viceroys of Sira and the Mahrāṭṭas. Some of the Persian sanads were issued by Dargā Kūli Khān during the reigns of Shāh Ālam I and Farrukh-siyar, and some by Dilāvar Khān during the reigns of Muhammad Shāh and Ahmad Shāh. Two more bear the names of Ghāzi Khān Bahādur and Tāhar Khān during the reign of Muhammad Shāh. The patel of the village, Abdul Latīf Khān, a lineal descendant of the Jāgīrdār Āsaf Sayīd Khān who was the grantee of 30 villages, has likewise a good number of Persian and Mahrāṭhi sanads with him. Some of the Persian ones were issued by Sādat Khān, Mohabat Khān and Diyānat Khān during the reigns of Farrukh-siyar and Muhammad Shāh, and by Dilāvar Khān during the reign of Ahmad Shāh. The Jāgīrdār appears to have been an officer under Farrukh-siyar in about A. H. 1125 (1713). One of the Mahrāṭhi sanads bears the seal of the Pēshwa Bālāji Bāji Rao. The Māri temple at Dēvisettihalli has painted wooden figures of Māri and Munīśvara, both seated on horses with female and male servants respectively standing at the sides. Māri has also a syce leading the horse. A new inscription was discovered at the village. The Tamil epigraph Hoskôṭe 140, consisting of 65 lines of which only 21 are printed, was completely copied.

25. Behind the Basava temple at Kôḍihalli is lying a big slab having at the top a boar attacked by three dogs as on the stone at Katigênhalli (see previous para), a young boar being shown below as lying dead. The slab is not inscribed, though neatly dressed.

Four new epigraphs were found at Bisanhalli, of which one is an old viraṇal of the Ganga period and another a Tamil record of the Chôla period. Some Kannada manuscripts in the possession of the Patel of the village were found on examination to contain a few Yakshagānas or rustic dramas. Near the Chennarāya temple at Dāsarhalli stands a fine four-pillared open maṇṭapa surmounted by a sculptured pavilion resembling a small gôpura with entrances in the four directions. All the entrances are flanked by dvārapālakas, the sculptures above them being Vishṇu flanked by consorts on the east, Vēṇugôpāla on the south, Vēṇugôpāla flanked by consorts on the west, and a standing male figure with folded hands on the north representing perhaps the donor of the maṇṭapa. The maṇṭapa is locally known as Uṭṭalakamba, and at the annual festival of the village goddess a cocoanut is let down through a cavity at the bottom of the pavilion and there is a contest among the villagers for breaking it. At Chikka Taggali is a māstikal

sculptured with a warrior and his two wives, both standing to his left. The warrior bears a sword in the right hand and a dagger in the left. Both his wives hold a flask in the right hand and a lotus in the left. In the jungle near Chennarāyapura, which belongs to the Mālūr Taluk, stands a huge slab, 7 feet by 5 feet, which shows a man attacking a tiger. The sculptures are beautifully and realistically executed. The man must have died in the conflict as he is represented at the top as worshipping a linga. Tradition says that at one time a pūjāri fought with a tiger and killed it. At a distance of a few yards from this is lying another huge slab containing the Tamil inscription EC, X, Mālūr 82, which was completely copied. Three new epigraphs, of which two are in Tamil, were discovered at Vaḍigêhalli; three, of which one is in Tamil, at Jinnagara; and two each at Bhaktarhalli and Goṇakanhalli. One of the records at Bhaktarhalli is an inscription of the reign of the Ganga king Śivamāra.

26. Gubbi is, according to tradition, Amaragunḍa-kshêtra, the holy place where Amaragunḍa Mallikārjuna, a Vīraśaiva teacher who was a contemporary of Basava, is supposed to have lived for some time and died. It is stated that two gubbachchis or sparrows, which used to listen to him when expounding the Purāṇas, fell dead on the day that the exposition was concluded. Thenceforward the place acquired the name Gubbi, which has been Sanskritised into Chaṭakapuri. The oldest temple in the town is the Gadde Mallêśvara, so called because it was once situated in a gadde or wet field outside the village. Owing, however, to the subsequent extension of the village, the temple now stands within the village itself. It has three cells in the navaranga enshrining Dakṣiṇāmūrti, Pārvati and Virabhadra. There are also two niches containing Gaṇapati and Subrahmanya. Leaning against the south wall near the Dakṣiṇāmūrti cell are some curious figures, namely, a rude male figure armed with a bow and an arrow said to represent a Śaiva devotee named Ōhila, vulgarly called Vailappa, who used to offer every day his own weight of guggala or bdellium to Śiva; a well carved seated female figure, about 1 foot high, with some indistinct things in the two hands; and two male figures, about 1 foot high, standing side by side with what looks like a vessel between the hands placed one over the other, two sticks or spears standing between them. A cell in the north of the navaranga has a linga called Rāmalingêśvara, said to have been set up by Rāma on his return from Lankā. To the left of the entrance to this cell is a small Basava or bull seated on the top of a short pillar, known as Gubbachchihakki-basava, which is said to have been set up to mark the spot where, as stated above, the two gubbachchis fell dead at the conclusion of Amaragunḍa Mallikārjuna's exposition of the Purāṇas. Gubbi was a place of great literary activity in the 15th and 16th centuries. Several Kannada works bearing on the Vīraśaiva cult were written during this period. Mallappa, the author of the Gaṇabhāshyaratnamāle and other works, who flourished at the close of the 15th century, was a native of Gubbi and a lineal descendant of Amaragunḍa Mallikārjuna. His grandson Gubbi Mallanārya wrote the poems Bhāvachintaratna and Vīraśaivāmrīta-purāṇa in 1513 and 1530 respectively. Prabhuga, a disciple of Mallanārya, wrote in about 1520 the Chūḍanāsthāna and the Vaibhōgarājāsthāna; and Chērama, another disciple of his, composed the Chēramānka-charite in 1526. Mallanārya's son Śānta wrote the Siddhēśvara-purāṇa in 1561. Enquiries were made as to the existence of any tradition with regard to the locality where Mallanna and his descendants lived, but no information was forthcoming.

27. The Vailappa (for Ōhilappa, see previous para) temple has a standing figure, about 2 feet high, of the Śaiva devotee Ōhila, holding a censer in the right hand and a bell in the left. Tradition has it that the tongue of his bell having fallen here, the devotee took up his residence at Gubbi. The Gubbiyappa temple is a large structure containing the gaddige or tomb of Gubbiyappa or Chennabasavayya, a Vīraśaiva teacher who lived during the rule of Mummaḍi Honnappa-Gauḍa, the Pālegār of Hosahalli. The gaddige has a linga and above it a seated metallic figure, above 1½ feet high, holding a linga in the left hand, the right hand being raised over it in the mode of offering worship. This represents Chennabasavayya and is the processional image of the temple. The ceilings of the mukha-maṇṭapa or front hall have paintings representing Śiva's 25 līlās or sports. To the left of the temple is a large kalyāṇi or pond built, according to the inscription on the pediment of its doorway, by one Aḍavi-svāmi in 1896. The pond has niches on the surrounding wall intended for enshrining the 63 devotees of Śiva, but owing to the death of Aḍavi-svāmi the work has been left unfinished. An annual festival on a large scale takes place in honor of Gubbiyappa. The Janārdana temple has a four-armed figure, about 4 feet high, of the god, bearing in the upper hands a discus and a conch and in the lower left a mace, the lower right which is in the abhaya attitude holding a tiny lotus. In a cell to the right in the navaranga is kept a standing metallic figure, said to be Kanyakāparamēśvari, holding a lotus in one of the hands like a nāchchīyār or consort of Viṣṇu. The Bēṭerāya temple enshrines a figure, about 2½ feet high, of Viṣṇu, holding in the upper hands a discus and a conch, in the lower right an arrow and in the lower left a bow. Being represented as a hunter with the attributes, the bow and the arrow, the god has the word bēṭe (hunting) in his name. An old inscription of the Ganga period was discovered at the first sluice of the Gubbi tank. A sanad issued by Pūrnaiya in 1801 to the Khāji of Gubbi was copied.

28. Niṭṭūr appears to have been a place of great importance at one time. In

Places in Gubbi Taluk.	EC, XII, Gubbi 11, of 1226, it is called the southern
Niṭṭūr.	Ayyāvale (Aihole), the navel of the Gangavādi Ninety-six Thousand and the crest-jewel of the Heruṇa-nāḍu.

The Śāntiśvara-basti at the village (Plate I) is a Hoysala structure of about the middle of the 12th century, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanāsi, a navaranga and a mukha-maṇṭapa. The navaranga, supported by black stone pillars, has nine beautifully carved ceilings, about 2½ feet deep, with projecting circular panels sculptured with the figures of the aṣṭa-dīpālakas. The beams, too, are sculptured with ornamental work. The elegantly carved navaranga doorway has five fascias in each architrave and bears an inscription on the lintel giving the name of the artist who prepared the doorway. The garbhagriha which contains the original figure being in a dilapidated condition, a new figure has recently been set up in the sukhanāsi. A cell to the left in the mukha-maṇṭapa has a figure of Padmāvatī. The outer walls, which are here and there supported by props, are decorated with single or double pilasters surmounted by well carved turrets. There are also intervening Jina figures, either seated or standing, but most of them are mutilated or chiselled out, a few being unfinished. On the north and south outer walls of the navaranga are two fine but empty niches with female figures at the sides. There are several nishidīs or epitaphs around the basti with the figures of the dead carved at the top. The basti deserves conservation. Two new inscriptions were copied here. A few palm leaf manuscripts in the possession of the archaka of the basti were examined and found to contain a few unpublished Jaina works in Sanskrit and Kannāḍa. The temple of Mariamma, the village goddess, has an anthill for the object of worship, and a box-like pavilion with painted wooden figures serves the purpose of a processional image. On this box is kept a painted wooden head, known as Sōma, which a particular individual puts on and dances during the annual festival. The Narasimha temple at Herûru has a pillar marked with nāmam for the object of worship. In the tank of the village is lying a panel, broken into two pieces, carved with the figures of the Saptamâtrikâh, which the villagers call Dêvakanye-kallu or the stone of the celestial virgins.

29. Kaḍaba is one of the pancha-grāmas or five settlements of the Hebbâr Śrivaishnavas, the others being Nuggihalli, Māyasandra, Nonavinkere and Biṇḍiganavile. The Tamil inscriptions of the place name it Daśaratharâma-chaturvêdi-mangalam. According to the Sthala-purâṇa the place was once the hermitage of the sage Kadamba who received and honored Râma on his way back from Lankâ and set up his image for worship. It derived its name from that of the sage. The Râma temple here is a large Dravidian structure with a gôpura and a fine Garuḍa-pillar in front. The pillar is 2½ feet square at the bottom and about 25 feet high and has an iron frame at the top for placing lamps. It has on the west face Garuḍa, on the south a lotus, on the east a discus and a conch with nāmam and on the north a swan. Though called the Râma temple, there is no figure of Râma in it at present. The figure is said to have been removed or destroyed by the Muhammadans and the cell remained vacant for a long time. Subsequently a stroke of lightning destroyed the vimāna or tower over the cell which has now disappeared altogether. It appears that a new image of Râma was prepared some time back, but it was not consecrated owing to some supposed defect in it. It was, however, removed to Bangalore some years ago and set up in the Râmêśvara temple in Chamarajapet. The temple at Kaḍaba has three cells standing in a line, the middle cell enshrining Janârdana, the south cell Vêṇugôpâla and the north Yôga-Narasimha. According to tradition Janârdana was discovered in an anthill by a gauḍa or head of a village who used to offer worship every day, and without his knowledge the sage Kadamba also worshipped the same deity. One day both met together at the anthill and came to an agreement that the gauḍa should worship the god during the day and the sage during the night. Soon after a temple was erected by the gauḍa for the god. The temple is in a neglected condition. The Tamil inscriptions Gubbi 19-21, which are all fragmentary, are on slabs built into the walls, in some cases upside down, in various places. The Kailâsêśvara temple seems to be an older structure. It has also in front a lamp-pillar, 3 feet square at the bottom and 20 feet high, with a framework at the top for placing lamps. It shows on the east face a linga canopied by the hoods of a serpent, on the south a lotus, on the west a swan and on the north Nandi with a couple with folded hands below it. The temple faces south though the linga faces east. Built into the north outer wall is a slab carved with a good elephant with a rider armed with a goad. The bund of the tank at the village has also a huge slab carved with an elephant. It is not clear what these slabs were meant to represent. At the east outlet of the tank is a temple dedicated to Hanumân, to the east of which is a fine uyyâle-kamba in the form of a gate, intended for swinging the god. It is about 15 feet high and beautifully carved on all sides with scroll work. At Râmpura near Kaḍaba is an inscription, EC, XII, Gubbi 27, dated 1696, which is of great interest from a sanitary point of view. It states that it was decided at a meeting of the villagers that no corpse should be buried within an arrow-shot of a well that had been newly built, and that in case any burial took place the buriers and the buried should be outcastes in this world and the next. We have some evidence here of the ideas of sanitation which the villagers had about two centuries and a quarter ago. A new inscription was discovered at Aremâranhalli and two at Prabhavanhalli.

30. Kuṇigal is a place of considerable antiquity. In old Kannada and Tamil epigraphs it is named Kuṇungil. In an old Kannada record, of about 785, at Kuppepâlya, Mâgaḍi Taluk, (see Report for 1915, para 64), the Ganga king Śivamâra is mentioned as the governor of Kuṇungil-nâḍu, i.e., the district of which Kuṇungil, the modern Kuṇigal, was the chief town. The same district was according to the Kaḍaba plates, EC, XII, Gubbi 61, governed by Vimalâditya, a chief under the Râshṭra-kûṭas, in 812. In the Chôla period Kuṇigal was surnamed Râjêndrâ-Śôlapuram. The Narasimha temple here is a large Dravidian structure, though in a dilapidated condition. Though so named, it has no image of Narasimha at present, but has a figure of Kêśava said to have been brought from Huli-yûrdurga. In the sukhanâsi are kept three sets of processional images, Narasimha, Venkaṭaramana and Varada-râja. In the prākâra or enclosure is the shrine of the goddess of the temple. In front of the temple stands a four-armed figure of Garuḍa holding a discus and a conch in the upper hands, the lower ones being folded as usual. Such a figure of Garuḍa is rather rare. The front portion of the temple has three cells on either side: of those on the north the middle one has Râma and the others Vishvaksêna and Nammâlvâr; while of those on the south two have Venkaṭaramana and the goddess, the third being vacant. Four new-records were copied here. The Sômêśvara temple is likewise a large Dravidian building with a mahâdvâra in the south. The linga, which is udbhava-mûrti, i.e., a natural stone, not set up by any one, faces east and is said to be bent a little towards the north and looking towards the south in the direction of Mahishâsuramardini in the front hall. The latter is a good standing figure, about 3½ feet high, with four hands, the upper holding a discus and a conch, the lower right a sword and the lower left a bow. It stands on the head of a buffalo and has below a lion to the right and a mungoose to the left. The image faces east with its head bent a little to the south looking towards the north in the direction of the linga. Tradition has it that the goddess was set up by Śankarâchârya. Among the figures in the navaranga may be mentioned Sûrya and a standing metallic figure of Gaṇapati. The former, about 4 feet high, is flanked by his consorts Samjñâ and Chhâyâ who do not however shoot but merely hold an arrow in the right hand and a bow in the left. The pedestal is carved with Aruṇa and seven horses and the prabhâ or glory is sculptured with the figures of the eight remaining planets. In the north-east of the enclosure is the shrine of Pârvatî, a good figure about 4 feet high, and to its right a small cell containing a well carved seated figure, about 4 feet high, of Sarasvatî, also said to have been set up by Śankarâchârya. This goddess bears in the upper hands a noose and an elephant-goad, the lower right being in the abhaya pose with a rosary and the lower left in the varada pose with a book. In a maṇṭapa supported by sculptured pillars, situated to the south-east of the temple, stands leaning against the east wall a figure, about 4½ feet high, of Garuḍa on whose pedestal are carved a fish, an elephant, a scorpion, a tortoise and a crocodile. The meaning of this symbolism is not clear. The sculptures may perhaps be compared with those usually found on the moonstones of Ceylon.

31. The Padmêśvara temple is a neat structure in the Hoysala style, consisting of a garbhagriha, a sukhanâsi and a navaranga. The ceilings of the navaranga, about 1½ feet deep, are carved with lotuses. Of the two cells at the sides of the sukhanâsi doorway, the right cell has a figure of Gaṇapati, the other being empty. The outer walls are decorated with pilasters. The Venkaṭaramana temple has three cells standing in a line. The middle cell has a good figure, about 3½ feet high, of Śrînivâsa; the left cell the goddess of the temple, and the right Gaṇapati. In the sukhanâsi of the middle cell are kept the processional image and a few figures of Âlvârs. There is also kept here the processional image of the temple on the Rangasvâmi hill, the peculiarity about this image being that it also reclines on a serpent like stone figures of Ranganâtha. The Uritirumaladêva temple enshrines the processional image of a ruined temple at Mûganpâlya of the same taluk. A new epigraph was found to the right of the temple. The Śivarâmêśvara temple is a modern structure, the linga in it having been set up about a hundred years ago. But the goddess of the temple, Mahishâsuramardini, is an old figure brought from the ruined Kottêśvara temple at Kottagere (see next para) of the same taluk. Trampling on the buffalo with one leg, she holds his tail with the lower right hand and stabs him with the trident in the lower left. Another inscription was discovered on the sluice of the Kunigal taluk. It gives the interesting information that the sluice was built in 1394 by Irugapa, the Jaina general of the Vijayanagar king Harihara II and the author of the Sanskrit lexicon Nânârtharatnâkara. While at Kunigal, I examined a number of palm leaf manuscripts in the possession of Pandit Isvara Sastri and of Basavalingappa, the manager of a Lingâyat maṭha known as Hiriya-maṭha, affiliated to the maṭha at Bâlehalli. The manuscripts with Isvara Sastri were found to contain Sanskrit works bearing on the Advaita-Vêdânta, logic, ritual, etc., and those with Basavalingappa Kannada works bearing on the Viraśaiva creed. Several of the works examined are not printed. According to the Sthala-purāṇa, once upon a time the emperor Nṛiga, his horse and dog, all the three, were cured of leprosy on bathing in a pond situated in the Kuṇigal tank.

32. Kottagere appears to have been a place of considerable importance at one time, judging from the inscriptions and ruins of the village. It was also known as Śrīdharapura during the time of the Hoysala king Viṣṇuvardhana (EC, XII, Kuṇigal 1). The Kottēśvara temple, now mostly buried, is an old Dravidian building with two entrances on the east and south. It was from this temple that the image of Mahishāsuramardini was removed, as stated in the previous para, to the Śivārāmēśvara temple at Kuṇigal. A Tamil inscription at the village (Kuṇigal 2), dated in the 31st year of the reign of the Chōla king Rājādhiraṇḍa (1048), registers a grant for a god named Rājendra-Śōla-Īśvaram-udaiya Rājādhiraṇḍa-vidāṅgar, who was in all probability identical with the god of this old temple. Tradition has it that the temple was founded by one Kottappa who by the favour of some Bairāgis styled Lipi-gōsāyis had acquired immense treasure after killing a seven-hooded serpent. He is also said to have built the tank at the village and to have met with a sad end at the hands of the labourers who, enraged at his merciless behaviour towards them, buried him alive. A ruined basti at the village has some mutilated Jina figures lying around, on the pedestal of one of which was found an inscription of the 12th century. On the site of another ruined temple were found figures of Sūrya and Bhairavi. The latter is seated in lalitāsana with flames around the head and the scorpion emblem on the pedestal, the attributes being a trident, a drum, a sword and a cup. Koḍavatti has a Lingāyat maṭha known as Koḍavatti.

Gavi-maṭha as it is situated in a cave (gavi) which is said to be connected by a subterranean channel with the Pātāla-Gangā of Keḷagaṇa-gavi maṭha at Śivaganga (see Report for 1915, para 17). Close to the maṭha are a few gaddiges or tombs of which the one that is most honored is the gaddige of Chennavīra-svāmi who is believed to have gone to Kailāsa with his body about one hundred years ago. A new inscription was copied at the village.

Amṛitūr.

The Chennakēśava temple at Amṛitūr is a neat Dravidian building with well dressed sculptured pillars. The god, about 3½ feet high, is a good figure flanked by consorts. The central ceiling in the navaranga is carved with a lotus. The temple is in a ruinous condition. In front of the Sōmēśvara temple near the tank is a good but rather slender lamp-pillar about 30 feet high and 1½ feet square at the bottom. Behind the temple is an uyyāle-kamba about 20 feet high. The temple of Paṭṭaladamma, the village goddess, situated at some distance from the village, has several painted stucco figures. Two of them, seated in the middle, represent the goddesses Paṭṭaladamma and Lakshmi. They are about 5 feet high and are canopied by a seven-hooded serpent. Each has a female attendant at the side, and also a serpent around the waist with hoods at both the extremities which support the hands. Lakshmi, the figure to the right, holds lotuses in the upper hands, the lower being in the abhaya and varada attitudes. The other goddess has a trident, a drum, a sword and a cup for her attributes. To the right and left of the goddesses are these figures near the walls facing each other:— a Rākshasa and a Rākshasi, huge terrific nude figures, seated, holding a decapitated head in the hand; two ṛishis, seated on tigers, holding a mace in the right hand; two horses supported by a man seated below the belly and led by a syce standing at the side holding the reins; and a seated woman with a child on the lap and two standing men apparently of some rank. The meaning of these figures is not clear. The walls and the beams are also painted with figures of the ten incarnations of Viṣṇu, scenes representing the līlās or sports of Śiva and so forth. The jātre or annual festival takes place in the month of Vaiśākha (April-May). The pūjāris are bestas or fishermen, honorifically styled Gange-makkaḷu (children of the Ganges).

33. The fortified hill Hutri-durga derives its name from Hutri, a village situated about two miles from its foot. The village at the foot of the hill is known as Santepête and that situated on the first elevation at about a third of the ascent, as Hutri-durga. The latter has several temples, the Adinārāyaṇa, the Virabhadra, the Ānjanēya and so on. The god in the first temple is a good figure about 2 feet high. In the sukhanāsi is kept another stone figure of Viṣṇu, said to be the god of the ruined Krishna temple on the hill. One of the pillars of the navaranga has the ten incarnations of Vishnu and another a rare figure of Matsya-Hanuma whose exploits are recorded in the Mairāvana-purāṇa. An inscription was discovered on the pedestal of the processional image of the temple. The hill Hutri-durga has eight gateways from the foot to the summit, and several outer gates known as Eleyūru-bāgilu, Bālekatte-bāgilu, Māgaḍi-bāgilu and so forth. On the summit, known as Śankara-kumbhi, is situated the Śankarēśvara temple, a small building with a spring called Dodḍa-ḍone in front of it. The linga is said to have been set up by Śankarāchārya. To the left in the navaranga is kept a good standing figure, about 2½ feet high, of Mahishāsūramardini with four hands, the upper bearing a discus and a conch, the lower left holding the mouth of the buffalo and the lower right piercing his neck with a trident. Three new epigraphs were copied at the temple. From the summit we get an extensive view of the surrounding landscape, a large number of tanks and hills meeting our gaze. The Ranganātha temple at Tirumale near Māgaḍi is clearly visible. Among other springs on the hill may be mentioned Kopparige-ḍone, Akkatangiṇṇa-ḍone, Akshate-ḍone and Emme-ḍone. There are also here the usual powder magazines and granaries and the ruins of Pālegār Kempe-Gauḍa's palace, treasury and other buildings. There is besides a large under-ground cell below a big boulder on the top. The highest peak is known as Niśāni-guṇḍu, because the flag (niśāni) of the Pālegār used to be hoisted on it. A platform below a figure of Gaṇapati carved on a boulder is known as Kempe-Gauḍa's hajāra or darbar seat. Near the ruined Krishna temple is lying the lower half of a millstone, about 3½ feet in diameter. Hutri-durga is locally known as Dodḍa-betṭa; to its left are Ōlagadare and Tirumaladēvara-betṭa, and opposite to it is Basavana-durga which is also fortified. Ōlagadare is so called because nautch parties used to be held on it during the Pālegār's time. Five modern inscriptions were found at Bidanagere. They are dated 1877 and reveal some Christian influence. It is said that they were engraved by one Tōpa-gauḍa who, though induced to become a Christian, did not become one. His son Tirumala-gauḍa is now living in the village. Betṭahalli has an old gate with old doors, but several houses have now sprung up beyond the limits of the original village. It derives its name from a hill near it named Narasimhadēvara-betṭa on which the temple of the god, facing east, is picturesquely situated. Two new epigraphs were discovered at the village. Two more were found at Lakshmīpura and one at bēchirākh (ruined) Kempakkanhalli.

The Siddhalingēśvara temple at Eḍeyūr, facing north, is a pretty large Dravidian building containing the gaddige or tomb of Tōṇṭada-Siddhalinga, a great Viraśaiva teacher and author who flourished at the close of the 15th century. He was one of the svāmis of the Murugi maṭha and had a large number of disciples of whom several have written Kannada works bearing on the Viraśaiva creed, his own work being Shaṭsthala-jñānasārāmṛita. In the veranda to the right of the mahādvāra is the inscription EC, XII, Kuṇigal 49, which gives an account of the spiritual greatness of the teacher and records the construction of a maṭha, the temple itself, by Chennavirappa-oḍeyar of Dānivāsa. To the right of the inscription stands a slab, about 6 feet high, carved at the top with a figure of Siddhalinga, a seated image with a linga in the left hand, the right hand being raised in the mode of offering worship, and below with a standing couple with folded hands evidently representing Chennavirappa-oḍeyar and his wife Parvatamma mentioned in the inscription as the donors of the maṭha. The ceiling of the mahādvāra is decorated with paintings of the ashṭa-dikpālakas or regents of the eight directions. In the east of the enclosure is an underground cell containing a figure of Rudrēśvara or Virabhadra which is said to have been there before the foundation of the maṭha. The ceilings of the mukha-maṇṭapa and the pātālāṅkaṇa or hall on a lower level have painted on them scenes from the life of Siddhalinga and the pancharimṣati or twenty-five līlās or sports of Śiva with labels in Kannada in the form of explanatory notes. On the gaddige is a lump of vibhūti or sacred ashes in the shape of a linga covered by a silver koḷaga or mask, above which is kept the processional image, a metallic figure of Siddhalinga, resembling the stone figure at the mahādvāra. The temple has a Rudrākshi-maṇṭapa and several other vāhanas or vehicles, and judging from the gold and silver jewels and vessels seems to be a rich one. About a dozen modern inscriptions on the temple jewels, vessels, staves, bells, etc., were copied, and Kunigal 49 was completed. The inscriptions on the bells are of some interest as they tell us that they were presents from a Muhammadan Amildar during Tipu's rule. One of them, however, tells us besides that the bell bearing it was presented by Minākshamma, wife of Daḷavāyi Basavarāja-arasu, and there is a story that the bells were thrown into a well during a Muhammadan incursion and that they were subsequently restored to the temple by the Muhammadan Amildar with inscriptions newly engraved on them. The temple owns a good car with six stone wheels, the car festival taking place on the seventh lunar day of the bright fortnight of Chaitra (April). There is also in the village an uyyāle-kamba about 20 feet high. Close to the temple is a Lingāyat maṭha, affiliated to the Bālehalli maṭha, in which the Bālehalli svāmi is said to take up his residence for a few months every year. Another Lingāyat maṭha at some distance is known as Chitra-maṭha because its veranda was once adorned with paintings. In front of this is a beautiful well built with well dressed vertical slabs all round and adorned with a well carved stone parapet. There is also a Varadarāja temple at Eḍeyūr which is in a dilapidated condition. Kaggere is the place where Siddhalinga is said to have been absorbed in the practice of yōga or meditation, so much so that anthills grew around him. There is a temple outside the village said to have been built over the spot where he practised yōga, the place having once been a garden, which accounts for the word Tōṇṭada (of the garden) prefixed to his name. In the garbhagriha is an embankment, known as yōga-piṭha, on which is kept a small linga covered with a mask. The processional image, resembling that at Eḍeyūr, is kept in a shrine at the village. An inscription on the mask was copied. In the navaranga is kept a good Rudrākshi-maṇṭapa, said to have been presented by a lady of Coorg. In a niche over the roof of the veranda is a stucco figure, seated in the midst of anthills, of Siddhalinga, similar to the stone figure at Eḍeyūr. The car festival takes place on the seventh lunar day of the bright fortnight of Phālguna (March).

35. Both the village and the hill commanding it are called Huliyūrdurga.

Huliyūr-durga.

The hill is a mass of rock and has the peculiar appearance of an inverted cup. The fortifications on it are said to have been built by Kempe-Gauḍa of Māgadi. The ascent is rather difficult, there being only slight depressions in the almost perpendicular rock to do duty for steps in some places. We have also here, as in other durgas, the usual springs, ruined houses, powder magazines, granaries, palace, darbār hall and so forth. Among the springs may be named Chikkadēvi-dōṇe, Akkatangiyara-dōṇe and Enjalele-dōṇe. At the second gateway from the foot is a shrine of Gaṇapati carved on a boulder. To the west of the hill is the Gōpālākriṣṇa temple with several ruined houses in its proximity. It faces east and has three cells: the middle cell has a good figure, about 4 feet high, of the god; the south cell some Ālvārs, the north being empty. Unlike in other temples, the dvārapālakas stand in the porch at the sides of the navaranga entrance. There are two elephants at the sides of the steps leading to the porch. To the right of the temple is a separate shrine of the goddess. The latter is a good figure, unfortunately broken into pieces by Muhammadans. In the Mallikārjuna or Jyōtirmayēśvara temple situated in the portion known as Halepēṭe of the village is kept the processional image of the above-mentioned Gōpālākriṣṇa temple. There is also a stone figure of Lakshmi recently prepared to replace the mutilated one. Some palm leaf manuscripts, about 50 in number, in the possession of Sitarama Sastri, grandson of Isvara Sastri of Kunigal (para 30), were examined. A few unpublished Sanskrit and Kannaḍa works contained in them were noted. The hill Hēmagiri, situated by the side of Huliyūrdurga, has on its summit a temple of Mallikārjuna. On its eastern slope is a shrine of Varadarāja, locally known as Hēmagiriappa, who is in the form of a round stone (udbhavamūrti), and on the southern a shrine of Bhairava. This hill is loftier than Huliyūrdurga but not fortified.

36. Two more villages of the Mysore District remain to be noticed, Haṭṇa in Nāgamangala Taluk and Maddūr in Maṇḍya Taluk. The Virabhadra temple at Haṭṇa.

Haṭṇa was once a Jaina basti dedicated to Pārśvanātha. Virabhadra is now made to stand on a Jaina pedestal. The temple is a Hoysaḷa structure consisting of a garbha- griha, an open sukhanāsi and a navaranga, and according to the inscription, EC, IV, Nāgamangala 70, at its entrance, was founded by a merchant named Sōmi-seṭṭi in 1178 during the reign of the Hoysala king Ballāla II. The central ceiling of the navaranga, about 3 feet deep, has a well carved lotus bud, while the others, which are flat, are decorated with blown lotuses, those at the corners having a single blown lotus, the others six. The Narasimha temple at Maddūr was briefly noticed in my Report for 1910, para 21. It is a Hoysala building facing east with later additions in the Dravidian style. The mahādvāra is surmounted by a lofty gōpura or tower. The outer walls are decorated with pilasters and miniature turrets. Around the garbhagriha are three niches in the three directions. There are also two more on the outer walls of the navaranga on the north and south. The navaranga is supported by four well carved black stone pillars adorned with bead work. The central ceiling, which must have been a good one, has been recently removed and glass windows set up to let in light. The god, though elegantly carved, is a terrific seated figure, about 4 feet high, represented as tearing out the entrails of the demon Hiranyakaśipu lying on the lap. Of the eight hands of the god, four bear the attributes a discus, a conch, a noose and an elephant-goad, two are engaged in tearing out the entrails and two in lifting them up for wearing around the neck as garlands. The prabhā or glory has the ten incarnations of Viṣṇu carved on it. To the right of the god stands Prahlāda with folded hands and to the left Garuḍa. In the sukhanāsi are kept along with the processional images of the temple those of the Varadarāja and Rāma temples also. Of these, the images of the Narasimha and Varadarāja temples are very handsome figures. The front hall has on either side three cells facing one another: the first cell to the left is the store-room, the second and the third enshrine Rāmānujāchārya and Vēdāntāchārya; the first to the right has Yaśōdā with child Kṛṣṇa, as also Śrīnivāsa; the second Viṣṇvakṣēna and Nammālvār, and the third Maṇavālamāmuni or Jiyar. The prabhā of Yaśōdā has sculptured on it the aṣṭa-dīkṣāpālakas or regents of the eight directions. The temple has two goddesses in separate shrines in the enclosure, the one in the south shrine known as Saunyanāyaki and the other in the north known as Narasimhanāyaki. In the north of the enclosure is a shrine containing well carved figures of Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Sitā and Hanumān (Plate VII), the last standing in a peculiar posture with the right hand raised to the nose, as if anxiously awaiting the orders of his lord Rāma. A new Hoysala inscription, dated 1325, was discovered on a slab built into the ceiling of the temple kitchen. It was not possible to copy it out fully, but an impression was taken with considerable difficulty by myself as the servants were not allowed to go inside. The god in the Varadarāja temple (Plate VIII), about 10 feet high, is exquisitely carved (see Report for 1910, para 21), but has no prabhā. A Tamil epigraph was copied at the village Hondalagere.

37. While at Mysore during the Dasara Festivities in October 1918, I inspected the Prasanna-Venkaṭaramaṇasvāmi temple at Mysore and found three stone inscriptions in it. One of them, dated 1836, gives a long account of the piety and peregrinations all over India of a Mādhva devotee named Subbarāya-dāsa alias Gōpāla-dāsa who founded the temple, and who was honored and patronised by Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III of Mysore. His portrait statuette (Plate IX, 1), about 3 feet high, represented as surrendering everything, even his body, to God, stands in front of the shrine with an inscription at the sides giving his name and explaining his attitude. He bears the musical instrument called tambūri and holds in the left hand a water-vessel from the spout of which falls a libation of water indicating that he is giving away everything that he can call his own. There is also an interesting painted wooden panel with figures on it (Plate IX, 2) fixed in the wall of a room over the Ānjanēya shrine in the same temple. The upper portion shows Vyāsa in the middle seated on the coils, and canopied by the five hoods, of a serpent, flanked on the right by Mādhvāchārya and Garuḍa and on the left by Bhīma and Hanumān, while the lower portion exhibits four standing figures of which the first represents Divān Pūrṇaiya, the second Krishna-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, the third Subbarāya-dāsa and the fourth his elder brother Śinappa. Mr. Raghavendra-dāsa, the manager of the temple, produced a copper plate inscription and a number of old papers consisting of sanads and letters addressed to Subbarāyadāsa and rahadāris or passports granted to him by various governments during his travels in different parts of India. These range in date from 1821 to 1858.

38. When I was in Mysore during the Birthday Festivities in June 1919, I visited the Prasanna-Krishnasvâmi temple, founded by Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar III in 1829. As stated in para 38 of my Report for 1912, there are nearly forty inscribed metallic images of gods, goddesses, saints and sages in this temple. The inscription in each case gives the name of the image and states that it was presented to the temple by the king. Plate IX, 3 represents an inscribed image of Râma. I also examined the palm leaf manuscripts in the library at the Śântiśvara-basti and in the private library of Mr. Aramane Jinachandraiya. The manuscripts, which were nearly two hundred in number, were found to contain Kannaḍa and Sanskrit poems and dramas, works bearing on logic, grammar, rhetoric, medicine, astrology, ritual, philosophy, cosmology and religion, and commentaries on several Sanskrit and Prâkrit works. A good number of the works is unpublished. Two new inscriptions were also copied at the Śântiśvara-basti.

39. A set of copper plates (Plate X) received from the agent of the Paradêśi-svâmi maṭha at Keregôḍi-Rangâpura, Tiptûr Taluk, may be looked upon as a record of some historical importance. It records a grant by the Ganga king Râjamalla II to a Śaiva teacher of the name of Nêtraśiva and may be assigned to the close of the 9th century. The plates are said to have been unearthed in the backyard of the maṭha about four years ago.

40. Other records examined during the year under report were an incomplete set of copper plates (Plate XI) relating to the Ganga received from the Lingâyat maṭha at Râjâpura, Ânekal Taluk; a set of three plates said to have been found in the records of the Taluk office at Seringapatam, received from the Mysore Deputy Commissioner, which registers a grant by the Vijayanagar king Krishna-Dêva-Râya; two sets and a copy of another received from the Smârta maṭha of the Bhâgavata-sampradâya at Mûluvâgil, Tirthahalli Taluk, recording grants to the maṭha by the Vijayanagar king Śrî-Ranga-Râya II and the Ikkêri chiefs Venkatappa-Nâyaka II and Bhadrappa Nâyaka, besides a sanad issued in 1812 by the Mysore king Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar III; eight copper grants received from Lakshmiśêna-bhaṭṭâraka-paṭṭâchârya of the Jaina maṭha at Singangadde, Narasimharâjapura Taluk, registering gifts to the maṭha from Chennarâya-oḍeyar and Chennavirappa-oḍeyar of Dânivâsa; an inscription on the umbrella of the throne of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore received from the Palace Controller; and a Persian sanad in the possession of Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao of the Comptroller's Office, Bangalore, issued to one of his ancestors by the Mughal emperor Shâh Alam II. This sanad was sent for favor of decipherment to Mr. G. Yazdani M. A., Nazim, Archaeological Department, Hyderabad State, who has very kindly sent me a transcript and a translation of the same. Similar help was also kindly rendered by Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao, referred to above, in connection with a few Mahrâṭhi papers received from Mysore.

41. Altogether the number of new records copied during the year under report was 188. Of these, 94 belong to the Bangalore District, 54 to the Tumkur District, 27 to the Mysore District, 8 to the Kadur District, 4 to the Shimoga District and 1 to the Kolar District. According to the characters in which they are written, 23 are in Tamil, 6 in Mahrâṭhi, 5 each in Nâgari and Telugu, 3 in Persian, and the rest in Kannaḍa. As usual, in every village that was surveyed the printed inscriptions, if any, were compared with the originals and corrections and additions made. The number of villages inspected during the tours was 102 in all.

42. While on tour the Kannaḍa Schools at the following places were visited:—Vanakanhalli and Dommasandra, Ânekal Taluk; Herûru, Gubbi Taluk; and Eleyûr, Eḍeyûr and Huliyûrdurga, Kunigal Taluk.

Office work.

43. Two monographs, one on the Kêśava temple at Bêlûr and the other on the Lakshmiḍêvi temple at Doḍḍa-Gaddavalli, forming Nos. II and III of "Architecture and Sculpture in Mysore" in the Mysore Archæological Series, have been printed during the year. The preparation of the plates, about 60 in number, for illustrating these monographs, has made fair progress.

44. The translations of the Kannaḍa texts of the revised edition of the Śravaṇa Belgoḷa volume have made satisfactory progress, about one hundred pages of the translations having been printed during the year.

45. Eight pages of the General Index to the volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica have been printed.

46. With regard to the revised edition of the Karnāṭaka-Śabdānuśāsanam, Appendices III to VI to the work, consisting of pages 513 to 560, have been printed. An Index of technical words occurring in the work is under preparation.

47. About 35 pages of the Kannada texts in the Supplement to the Hassan volume, and about 28 pages of the Tamil texts in the Supplement to the Mysore volume, of the Epigraphia Carnatica, have been printed during the year.

48. In connection with the Supplement to Volume IX (Bangalore) of the Epigraphia Carnatica, about 100 new inscriptions, recently discovered in the Anekal and Hoskote Taluqs, are being correctly copied for incorporation into it. The Supplements to Volumes X and XII of the Epigraphia Carnatica are also under preparation.

49. With regard to the publication of selections from the inscriptions concerning matters of historical and social interest, the selections relating to history and religious belief are still being examined. The preparation of a classified list of Mysore inscriptions according to the dynasties of kings to which they relate has not made any progress owing to pressure of other work.

50. About 200 photographs of views of temples of artistic merit were prepared and sent to the Deputy Commissioners of Hassan and Kadur for sale to the public. About 45 photographs were also sold at the Archaeological Office. Forty copies of the Monograph on the Kesava Temple at Somanathapur were sold in England through Messrs. Probsthain & Co., Booksellers, London.

51. The Photographer and Draughtsman prepared illustrations for the Annual Report for 1917-18, and for the Monographs on the Kēśava temple at Bēlūr and the Lakshmīdēvi temple at Dodḍa-Gaddavalli. He also took photographs of some copper plates.

52. The Architectural Draughtsman prepared nine plates illustrating the monuments at Araḷaguppe, Halebid, Heggere, Marale, Śringēri, Bastihalli, Śravaṇa Beḷgoḷa and Sira.

53. The Assistant Photographer acting for the Half-tone Engraver printed a good number of photographs for the office file and for sale to the public. He mounted the Half-tone blocks prepared for the Annual Report for 1917-18 and for the Monographs on the Kēśava temple at Bēlūr and the Lakshmīdēvi temple at Dodḍa-Gaddavalli. He accompanied me on tour in the Bangalore District and took photographs of a number of buildings and sculptures.

54. A list of the photographs and drawings prepared during the year is given at the end of Part I of this Report.

55. The two copyists attached to the office transcribed the following works during the year :—(1) Prabhudēvara-purāṇa by Hariśvara, (2) Vastukōśa by Nāgavarma II, (3) Sobaginasōne by Dēpa, (4) Śabdamanidarpaṇa by Kēśirāja, and (5) Nyāyasudarśana (in part). They also compared about 700 pages of transcripts.

56. A few books received for review from the Huzur Secretary to His Highness the Maharaja and the Inspector-General of Education in Mysore were examined and opinion sent.

57. Professor Jouveau Dubreuil of Pondicherry, and Messrs. T. A. Narasimhacharyar, B.A., B.L., Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, and A. Santanarama Iyengar, Head Master, V. R. High School, Nellore, visited the office during the year.

58. Sir John Woodroffe, Calcutta, has very kindly presented to the Office Library a set of his publications on Tantric literature. Mr. M. N. Rangasami Iyengar of Triplicane, Madras, has kindly presented to the Office Cabinet the 58 copper coins which he had sent for examination last year (see last year's Report, paras 50 and 142).

59. The office staff have discharged their duties with diligence. I have again to record here the loss to the office by retirement of the services of two experienced old hands during the year under report. S. Ramasvami Iyengar, the Tamil Pandit, who was a trained hand in Tamil work, retired from the 1st July 1917, and continued in an acting appointment till the 1st August 1918. He subsequently died of influenza in October 1918. Pandit Anandalvar, the Senior Copyist, was a very useful hand both by his eminent scholarship in Sanskrit and by his experience of archæological work. He retired from the 16th September 1918.

PROGRESS OF ARCHÆOLOGICAL RESEARCH.

PART II.

1. Epigraphy.

60. Most of the new records discovered during the year under report are assignable to specific dynasties of kings such as the Ganga, the Nolamba, the Chôla, the Hoysala, and those of Vijayanagar and Mysore. There are besides a few records relating to the Mughals, the Mahrâtta, and the chiefs of Ikkêri, Sugatûr and Kalale. Among the epigraphical discoveries of the year, a set of copper plates received from the Tiptûr Taluk is of some historical importance. It relates to the Gangas and registers a grant in about 900 by Râjamalla II to a Śaiva teacher of the name of Nêtraśiva. A fine stone inscription at Khâji Hosahalli, Hoskôte Taluk, which may be assigned to about the 7th century, brings to notice a chief, probably a Bâna, named Binayâdityarasar. Some copper plate inscriptions received from the Muḷuvâgil maṭha of Tirthahalli Taluk, bring to light for the first time a few details about this little known institution of the Bhâgavata-sampradâya. A bell in the Siddhalingêśvara temple at Eḍevûr, Kunigal Taluk, bears an inscription stating that it was a present from Jâfar Khân, an Âmîla under Tippu Sultan. An inscription in the Prasanna-Venkaṭaramaṇasvâmi temple at Mysore, dated 1836, gives a long account of the peregrinations all over India of a Mâdhva devotee named Subbarâya-dâsa, who was honored and patronised by Krishna-Râja-Oḍeyar III of Mysore.

THE GANGAS.

61. About half a dozen inscriptions relating to the Ganga dynasty were copied during the year. They include two copper plate grants, one of Râjamalla II and the other incomplete. Of the others, one refers itself to the reign of Śivamâra and two to the reign of Râjamalla II. A few more epigraphs which are clearly of the Ganga period, though no king of that dynasty is named in them, will also be noticed under this head.

Śivamâra.

62. A viragal at Bhaktarhalli, Hoskôte Taluk, refers itself to the reign of Śivamâra-mahârâja and tells us that, during ? Kandallî's incursion into Peñjara of Kâduvaṭṭi, Kaḷattoran, having killed...., fell; and that ? some portion (niḷu) of Tijaniyûr was granted for him. Kâduvaṭṭi is the Pallava or Nolamba king, and Peñjara (Henjeru) the modern Hêmâvati in Madaksira Taluk of the Anantapûr District, which was once the capital of the Nolambas. The period of the record may be about 800.

Râjamalla II.

63. The plates of Râjamalla II (Plate X) referred to in para 61, are 5 in number. Each plate measures 10" by 2", the first plate being engraved on the inner side only. The writing is in beautiful Haḷa-Kannaḍa characters. The plates are strung on a circular ring which is $4\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter and $\frac{1}{2}$ " thick, and has its ends secured in the base of a circular seal $2\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter. The seal bears in relief an elephant which stands to the proper right. The plates are in the possession of Nirvanappa, agent of the Parâdêśisvâmi maṭha at Keregôdi-Rangâpura, Tiptûr Taluk, and are said to have been unearthed in the backyard of the maṭha about four years ago.

64. The language of the inscription is Sanskrit with the exception of the portion (lines 67--74) giving the boundaries of the village granted along with some additional item of information, which is in old Kannaḍa. The Sanskrit portion also contains a few verses here and there in addition to the two imprecatory verses coming at the end. The inscription is somewhat similar in contents to the Narasâpûr plates (EC, X, Kôlâr 90), of 903, of the same king and to the Gaṭṭavâdi plates (EC, XII, Supplement, Nanjangûd 269), of 904, of his nephew Ereyappa. The characters, too, resemble those of the Gaṭṭavâdi plates. There are here and there a few orthographical errors and omissions of words in lines 11, 19, 28 and 66 due apparently to the carelessness of the engraver. The portion giving the date is incomplete: it stops abruptly at Śaka 8 for 800 and odd. Notwithstanding these defects, the inscription appears to be a genuine record of about A. D. 900.

65. As stated in the previous para, the present record is somewhat similar in contents to the Narasâpûr and Gaṭṭavâḍi plates. As the latter sets are incomplete, wanting one or two plates in the middle, it is perhaps desirable to examine the present grant in some detail. Like the other grants it begins with an invocation of the god Padmanâbha and describes the first king Kongaṇi-varṇa-dharma-mahâdhirâja as a sun in illumining the clear firmament of the Jâhnavêya or Ganga family, as having obtained strength and valour by means of the great stone pillar cut asunder with a single stroke of his sword, as adorned with the ornament of the wounds received while cutting down the hosts of his cruel enemies, and as belonging to the Kâṇvâyana-gôtra; and his son Mâdhava-mahâdhirâja as inheriting the qualities of his father, as conducting himself agreeably to his culture and modesty, as having obtained sovereignty only for the sake of the good government of his subjects, as a touchstone for testing gold the learned and poets, as skilled among those who expound and practise the science of politics, and as the author of a commentary on Dattaka's aphorisms. Then the record proceeds with the genealogy thus:—His son, possessed of the qualities of his father and grandfather, of a fame tasted by the waters of the four oceans, acquired in many battles (arrayed) with elephants, was Harivarṇa-mahâdhirâja. His son, devoted to the worship of Brâhmanas, gurus and gods, meditating on the feet of Nârâyana, was Viṣṇugôpa-mahâdhirâja. His son, with his head purified by the pollen from the lotuses the feet of Triyambaka, was Mâdhava-mahâdhirâja. His son, (the beloved sister's son) of Kriṣṇavarṇa-mahâdhirâja who was a sun in the firmament of the Kadamba family, was named Avinîta. His son, possessed of the three constituents of regal power spreading everywhere, (causer of bewilderment to the fire of Yama by the excess of food in the shape of victims of heroes) immolated at the sacrifices of battles at Andari, Âlattûr, Porulâre, Pernagara and other places, author of a commentary on the fifteenth sarga of the Kirâtârajuniya), was named Durvinîta. His son was named Mushkara. His son, a rising sun in dispelling the mass of darkness his enemies, had the celebrated name Śrîvikrama. His son (name not given). His younger brother, with his lotus feet illumined by the rays of the suns the jewels on the tops of the diadems of bowing kings, the self-chosen lord of Lakshmi, beloved by the good, was named Nava-Kâma, his fame in destroying the hosts of his enemies being the theme of song. He had also another name Śivamâra.

66. His grandson, raging with fury at the head of battle horrid with the assault of heroes, horses, men and groups of elephants; terrific in anger; a brilliant sun in illumining the clear firmament of the Ganga family; a terror to enemies; doer of good; protector of the virtuous path; possessor of a good kingdom; resplendent with excellent qualities in the assembly of kings; a crest-jewel of kings;—was Śrîpuruṣa, whom the poets daily praise as Prajâpati or Brahma, and the interior of whose palace echoed the sounds of the holy ceremonies accompanying the great gifts made by him every day. He was also known as Prithivî-Kongaṇi-mahâdhirâja. His son, with his lotus feet caressed by the chaplets on the crowns of all the kings subdued by his valour, embraced by the goddess of victory of the hostile king Vallava (Râshtrakûṭa) drawn towards himself by his sharp bright sword, possessed of wounds caused by the thunderbolts of the tusks of lusty elephants in many battles, a sun in the sky of the celebrated pure Ganga family, was Kongaṇi-mahârâjâdhirâja Śivamâra-Dêva, surnamed Saygôṭṭa, whose anger in battle drove hostile kings in a moment into the mouth of Antaka, horrid to behold, filled with twining entrails, blood and flesh. His younger brother was Vijayâditya. From him was born for the benefit of the world like the moon from the ocean Râjamalla, whose glory was admired and sung by all the world; who was resplendent with the charm of the female elephant the goddess of heroism leaning against the tying post his arm; who, having by a successful attempt taken possession of the youthful goddess of sovereignty fit for his family that had been lost through the absence of the skilfulness of hand of Śivamâra-mahârâja and had been sad owing to her seizure by the Râshtrakûṭa king, made her cheerful by auspicious anointment and adorned her with the ornaments of good qualities; on whose bearing the great burden of the earth, of which only a bit was in the possession of Vankêṣa, the elephants at the points of the compass, Śēsha and the Lōkapālas took rest; the fame of whose liberality, valour, just rule, intelligence, pure family and righteous conduct pervaded the whole world; who merely to punish wicked chiefs took their wealth, kingdoms, etc., but on seeing their sad faces restored to them through compassion all their possessions; who by his truthfulness, valour and wealth excelled Dharmarāja, Subrahmanya and Vishṇu; who extinguished the wild fire of the poverty of the people by the stream of his constant gifts; who was a mass of pleasant light which was the sole cause of increasing the great treasure of the Ganga family; whose sovereignty was resplendent with the goddess of victory obtained on many battle-fields; who was possessed of the wealth of modesty befitting his family; who, though having without superseding his father (guru) established his rule in king Rāṇavikrama's country, was content with the position of heir-apparent; who subsequently had himself anointed to the throne and crowned; who subjugated the whole world by his might; who dispelled the darkness of hostile kings by his daily increasing valour; who eclipsed the intelligence of Bṛhaspati by his skill in politics; whose feet were scarred by the rubbing of the jewels in the rows of the crowns of bowing kings; and who was renowned in the world as Satyavākya-Konganivarma-dharma-mahārājādhirāja-paramēśvara.

67. His son, who churned the ocean of the hostile army with the Mandara mountain of his arm, whose broad breast was embraced by the goddess of sovereignty, was Nitimarga-Konganivarma-dharma-mahārājādhirāja Ereganga-Dēva. In a terrible battle fought at Rājāramaḍu this eminent king defeated with ease his powerful enemies; and the Vallabha army commanded by the Pallava, Rāshtrakūṭa, Kuru, Magadha, Mālava, Chōla, Lāla and Chalukya kings he caused to fall down along with the tears of their wives. His son, averse from the conduct of the Kali age, adorned with good qualities and the virtues of Māndhātṛi and other ancient kings, destroyer of hostile kings with his sword drawn in anger, illuminator of his family, a Cupid to women, was Satyavākya-Konganivarma-dharma-mahārājādhirāja Rājamalla. These are the hostile Vangas, the Paundras, the Magadha and Kōsala kings, and these the Kālinga, Āndhra and Draviḍa kings, that were pierced by the weapons discharged by this king—thus did the people praise his valour in the Sāmiya battle. His younger brother, harasser of the Pallava family by his prowess, having his court surrounded by the army of subjugated enemies, conqueror by his virtues of the impure Kali, possessed of the wealth of pure fame, proud of his four-fold army, was Būtuga, surnamed Guṇaduttaranga, on whose broad breast abode, resplendent like another Lakshmi, the daughter of the universal king Vllabaha, named Abbalabbā. The inscription then records that, when the Śaka years eight had elapsed, the village named Kēdasūr in Nirgunda-vishaya was granted with exemption from all imposts, for the renovation of the Īśvara temple at the village named Alūr in Magare-vishaya, to Nētraśivāchārya, disciple of Śākāri-bhaṭṭāraka, a moon in the firmament of the line of pure Śaivism? devoted to Tripurahara (Śiva) who is an embodiment of the triad of gods causing the creation, protection and destruction of the whole world. Then follow in the Kannada language details of boundaries of the village granted and the statement that this was the charity of the Three-hundred including Kēsiḥaṭṭa, Nadi-gavuṇḍa of Sadeyanūr, Mara-gavuṇḍa of Tirbūr, and Dōra-gavuṇḍa of Keregudu. The record closes with two usual imprecatory verses and the remark that the grant was engraved by Viśvakarmāchārya.

68. A few details given in this record about some of the later Ganga kings deserve notice. Of Saygoṭṭa Śivamāra it is stated that he gained a victory over the Rāshtrakūṭa king. The reference here is evidently to his victorious attack on the Rāshtrakūṭa army encamped at Mudugundūr, mentioned in the Narasāpūr plates (Kōlār 90). Rājamalla I is said to have regained the Ganga kingdom which had been lost during his uncle Śivamāra's reign. This fact is also referred to in E C, IV, Yedatore 60 which says that he rescued from the Rāshtrakūṭas his country, which they had held two long, as Vishṇu in the form of a Boar rescued the Earth from the infernal regions. The statement that a bit of Rājamalla's kingdom was in the possession of Bankēsa is very interesting as we learn from the Konnūr inscription (Epigraphia Indica, VI, 25) that at the command of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Amōghavarsha I (814-877) his general Bankēsa invaded Gangavāḍi, put to flight the ruler of Talavanapura (Talkāḍ) and conquered his country. But the meaning of the other statement that though Rājamalla, without superseding his father, established his rule in Rāṇavikrama's (i.e., his father Vijayāditya's) country, he was content with the position of heir-apparent is not quite clear. Nitimarga's victory at Rājāramaḍu is also mentioned in the Narasāpūr and Gaṭṭavāḍi plates. The village in the battle at which Rājamalla II distinguished himself is called Sāmiya in the present record: Rēmiya of the Gaṭṭavāḍi plates is perhaps the result of a mislection. Similarly, Būtuga's wife, who is said to be named Chandrobbeḷabbā in the Gaṭṭavāḍi plates, is here called Abbalabbā. This grant affords evidence of the existence of the Kālāmukha sect in Mysore in the 9th century. The village Keregūdu occurring at the end may perhaps be connected with the first part of Keregōḍi-Rangāpura where the plates were found. It is not clear who the donor was, whether Rājamalla II or his brother Būtuga.

69. Two viragals in Varadaiya's field at Prabhavanhalli, Gubbi Taluk, refer themselves to the reign of a Rāchamalla who may in all probability be the same king. One of them states that Kumadayar, having attacked Maraligeyūr, fell. The other is too fragmentary to make anything out of it.

Two more viragals copied during the year probably belong to the same reign. One of them at Ānekal, EC, IX, Ānekal 48, now revised, seems to record the death of a chief named Nayavinitar, who is described as possessed of troops of elephants and horses, and a grant of land. Then follows this imprecatory sentence: The man who said "Let this go to ruin" was to be looked upon by the world as guilty of the five five five great sins. The repetition of the number, intended apparently to emphasise the fact, is rather peculiar. The engraver was granted with exemption from all imposts wet land that could be sown with one kaṇḍuga of seeds and the same area of uncultivated land. The other viragal near the outlet of the tank at Bisanhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, records that Hemmaya's son Sānta fought during a cattle-raid, fell and became a resident of the world of gods. The period of these records may be about 900.

70. A few other inscriptions which are clearly assignable to the Ganga period may also be noticed here. A viragal near the sluice of the tank at Gubbi tells us that Arakella's son Māraghan, by order of Eṇeyar, attacked the army of Vallavarsar at Vigeyūr and fell with him. The name Rāsikar occurs at the end. It is not clear if Eṇeyar here refers to the Ganga king Eṇeyappa. In an inscription at Hosahalli, Chikmagalur Taluk (see Report for 1916, para 69) it is stated that Arakalla's son and grandson fought against the Nolamba king Aṇṇiga and fell. The date of the present inscription may be about 950. Another fragmentary inscription at Halehalli, Ānekal Taluk, after recording the death of some individual in a fight, states that when Kaṇḍugi was governing Kārige a grant of land in Goravagere was made to Bhukkayar. The grant was to continue for all time. The period of this record may be about 1000.

A copper plate inscription (Plate XI) received from the Lingāyat maṭha at Rājāpura, Ānekal Taluk, is of some interest as being a curious Ganga record. It is incomplete, consisting of only two plates, the first and the last, and has no seal. Each plate measures 8½" by 4" and the ring is 3" in diameter and ½" thick. The writing is a mixture of Nāgari, Grantha and old Kannada characters. The inscription opens with the usual invocation of Padmanābha and describes the first king as in para 65 above, though unlike other grants it ascribes to him the epithets paramēśvara and parama-bhaṭṭāraka and couples his name with that of Mādhava-mahārājādhirāja. Then it goes on with the epithets usually applied to Mādhava and breaks off in the middle, the first plate ending here. The other plate is a continuation of the details of boundaries in the Kannada language, at the end of which it is stated that the witnesses were ? the people of the Ganga-maṇḍala Ninety-six Thousand. Then follows a usual imprecatory verse, and the record closes with obeisance to Arhat-paramēśvara, from which we may conclude that the grant was made to some Jaina temple or teacher. As the middle plates are missing it is not possible to say in which Ganga king's reign the grant was made. Among the boundaries occur the names of three villages, Gangavūr, Āneyūr and Banavanelli, belonging to Dvisandi-Sattivangala which seems to represent a district. The mixture of characters is a point which may cause a reasonable doubt as to the genuineness of the record.

THE NOLAMBAS.

71. Only two records relating to the Nolamba kings were copied during the year. One of them refers itself to the rule of Mayinda-Nolamba and the other to that of Iriva-Nolamba.

1 b

Last a

Last b

Mayinda-Noḷamba

72. A viragal at Jōḍi-Dalasigere, EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 9, now revised, tells us that when Mayindam Noḷamban was ruling the Gangā Six-Thousand, on the cattle of Nelligere being harried, Rosagaralayan Posameṇḍi rescued the cattle and ascended to the world of gods. The mahājanas granted one koḷaga of wet land for him. He who destroys this shall be a sinner. The engraver was Prayōḷaman. The date of the record may be about 870. For other names with the suffix meṇḍi see Report for 1917, para 84.

Iṛiva-Noḷamba

73. An inscription on the sluice of the tank at Banahalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, records that, in the 20th year of the coronation of Iṛivan-Noḷamban, Neleyamma-gāvunḍa, son of Goluki-gāvunḍa, an old resident of Chambikanūr, and two others (named) built the sluice. The earliest date given in the inscriptions for Iṛiva-Noḷamba is 943, and in case this is the first year of his coronation, the date of the present record would be 962.

? THE BANAS.

74. A beautifully engraved old inscription (Plate XII) at Khâji Hosahalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, tells us that, while the illustrious Binayādityarasar was ruling the Koṛikundâlke Three-hundred, he granted, with exemption from all imports, to Kâ-meya, the wet land known as Uttamameṇḍi which had been obtained by the ancestors of Tâyande of Tiḷgalûr. He who destroys this shall be guilty of the great sin of having slaughtered one thousand Brâhmians and one thousand tawny cows. May dharma last for as long as the moon and sun endure for him who protects this. The record is not dated, but its palaeography leads to the inference that its period may be about 700. That Binayādityarasa may be a Bâṇa chief is merely a conjecture. The name Vijayāditya often occurs among the Bâṇa kings, but not Vinayāditya. The latter, however, occurs among the Châlukyas and the Hoysalas. The Hoysala king Vinayāditya belongs to the 11th century. The Châlukya king Vikramāditya, father of Vinayāditya, is said to have conquered a Bâṇa king (Indian Antiquary, VI, 75). It is just possible that the present chief was a subordinate of Vinayāditya and assumed this name.

THE CHOLAS.

75. There are only two inscriptions relating to the Chōḷa kings. One of them is in Kannaḍa and the other in Tamil. A few more Tamil epigraphs which seem to belong to the Chōḷa period will also be noticed under this head.

Rājendra-Chōḷa

76. A worn inscription on a tōraṇa-gamba or sculptured gateway in front of the Chaudēśvari temple to the east of Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk (para 23), refers itself to the reign of this king. It is dated 1028 and records that in theyear of the reign of Oḍeyâr Kōp-Parakēsaripammar alias [Rājendra-Chōḷa-Dēvar] who captured Gange, Kaḍāram and the East country, Sēvachâri, son of.. bāṇade of Kalu.....in Vikrama-Chōḷa-maṇḍala of Gangavâḍi, set up the makara-tōraṇa or gateway. The date given is the Śaka year 950 corresponding to the cyclic year Vibhava. The regnal year is evidently the 17th. Sēvachâri is apparently the sculptor who made the gateway and engraved the inscription on it. Though the sculptures are somewhat rude, they are of interest as illustrating the art of the early part of the 11th century.

? Rājendra-Dēva

77. A fragmentary Tamil inscription near the outlet of the tank at Bisanhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, appears to be a record of Rājendra-Dēva. The upper portion of the stone is broken and the letters are worn in parts. From the available portion we learn that in the presence of the officers Parakēśari-mūvēṇḍavēḷān and Vaḷava (râ-râya) mūvēṇḍavēḷān an agreement was made about the payment of certain taxes by the nāḍu. The writer of the record was Âdittadēvan. As Vaḷavarāja-mūvēṇḍavēḷān is mentioned as an officer under Rājendra-Dēva in No. 7 of 1914 of the Madras Epigraphical Report, it is very likely that the present epigraph is a record of the same king. Its date may be about 1055.

78. Two Tamil inscriptions in the Chennakēśava temple at Hāragadde, Ânekal Taluk, which appear to belong to the Chōḷa period, though no king is named in them, may also be noticed here. One of them, dated 1101, records the grant of Pārangalāni alias Muraśādirāja-chaturpēdi-mangalam, situated in the southern portion of Muraśu-nāḍu in Rājendra-Śōla-vaṇanāḍu of Muḍigonḍa-Śōla-maṇḍalam, as a piṇḍidāna, with the condition that an annual contribution of 40 pon should be paid by the donee. Then follows the usual imprecatory sentence. The other tells us that Muraśādirāyar granted 3 pon for the maintenance for as long as the moon and sun last of a perpetual lamp in the temple of Kēśavapperumāl at Pārangalāni alias Chaturpēdi-mangalam out of the interest on the sum. In this inscription the prefix Muraśādirāja is left out, probably by a mistake of the engraver, in giving the surname of the village. The first record does not name the donor, who was apparently Muraśādirāyar.

THE HOYSALAS.

79. There are about half a dozen inscriptions relating to the Hoysalas, the majority of them being in Tamil. Almost all of them refer themselves to the reign of Ballāḷa III. There is, however, one record which belongs to Viśvanātha. Some printed inscriptions which have now been revised will also be noticed under this head, as also a few others which belong to the Hoysala period, though no king is named in them.

Viśvanātha

80. A fragmentary Tamil epigraph in Patel Virasvamanṇa's field to the north of Jinnāgara, Hoskōṭe Taluk, seems to register a grant for the god Sōmanātha of Śinnagari (Jinnāgara) during the rule of Bhōśaḷa-vīra-Viśvanātha-Dēva.

Ballāḷa III

81. Several records of this king were copied during the year. A much worn Tamil inscription in front of the Varadarāja temple at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1327, tells us that during the rule of (with usual titles) Vallāḷa-Dēvar Viṭṭappa and the inhabitants of Periya-nāḍu granted certain lands (specified), including the wells underground and the trees overground, below the tank Marudēri to Alagi...of Ovaṭṭam alias Varadarāja-chaturvēdi-mangalam. The date is given in both the Kaliyuga and Śaka eras. Another on the sluice of the tank at Dēvi-setṭihalli, EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 140, dated 1332, which has now been revised, states that Turavi Ammai-śiyar, the superintendent, Nambiravi-setṭiyār, Pulimāra-gāmiṇḍar and other inhabitants (four named), of Pulliyūr-nāḍu which belonged to Vaiśa-gayunḍan, Viragangan and other officers under the universal emperor Vīra-Vallāḷa-Dēva's great minister Śinga-dannāyakkar, and the officers of the nāḍu including the accountant granted as a kuḍangai 4 kaṇḍugas of wet land below the big tank and 4 kaṇḍugas of dry land to Śennakaponida-setṭi's son Pemuni-setṭi for having rebuilt the village which had been in ruins for three years and for having paid one year's loss. They also granted him the village with exemption from taxes together with...in the presence of Gōvinda-nāyakkar with permission to have the grant engraved on stone and copper. He likewise founded another village, constructed a tank, built a sluice and had this inscription incised on it. Then follows the signature of the nāḍu—śrī-Sōmanātha. Another in a field to the south of the tank at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1340, records that, while Pōśaḷa-vīra-Vallāḷa-Dēvar was pleased to rule the earth, his great minister Vallappa-dannāyakkar's minister Śikka-Viṭṭappa-ulaiyar and the inhabitants of Periya-nāḍu granted to Turavaraśa Akkadēvar's son Śiyāṇan, the superintendent of the nāḍu, as a kaṭṭu-kuḍangai, 6 kaṇḍugas of wet land, for having built the big tank at Ovaṭṭam. In a fourth inscription of the same reign at Chennarāyapura (EC, X, Mālūr 82), dated 1341, which has now been re-examined, the donors were Viṭṭappar and the inhabitants of the nāḍu (naiṭṭavar) and not Nadappar, and the lands granted were those included within the four boundaries of the village Takkili. The imprecatory sentences at the end are of some interest. They run thus:—He who violates this shall incur the sin of having killed seven tawny cows and twelve Brāhmins on the banks of the Ganges, the sin of having breached a tank filled with water and the sin of having dismantled a temple. The record closes with the signatures of Viṭṭappanavar, his accountant Śandappan and Kappappillai. A Kannada inscription built into the roof of the kitchen of the Nārasimha temple at Maddūr, Māyḍya Taluk, dated 1325, refers itself wrongly to the reign of Nārasimha III instead of to that of Ballāḷa III. It is mostly worn and seems to record that when (with usual titles) the nissanka-pratāpachakravarti śrī-vīra-Nārasimha-Dēvarasa was in the residence of Dōrasamudra ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom, the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara Kamaḷarāja Tammaya, Nāgarasa, the mahā-prabhu... ..and others having assembled, a settlement was made with regard to the duties and privileges of the 13 samayas. The writer of the record was....namitra.

82. A few more Tamil inscriptions copied during the year may belong to the reign of the same king. A worn epigraph at Hondalagere, Maṇḍya Taluk, records the grant of 20 vrittis to Brāhmans by all the mahājanas of the nāḍu. By order of the mahājanas the grant was written by Tārana....rapperumāl. Another at Vāgaṭa, EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 132b, now revised, tells us that Rāchcharaśar of the Śrīvatsa-gōtra, son of Bomarasar, made a money grant to provide for the expenses of the tirumulaḷai (or ankurārpaṇa) festival of the god Varadarāja of Ovaṭṭam. Another at Vaṇakanhalli, Ānekal Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1340, records a grant for the god Nalla-Vināyakap-pillaiyar by Talai....rāyar. From another inscription at the same village, Ānekal 55, the god appears to have been set up in 1340 by Nalla-nāyan.

83. A few other records which belong to the Hoysaḷa period, though no king is named in them, may also be noticed here. An inscription on the pedestal of a Jina image lying on the site of a ruined basti at Kottagere, Kuṇigal Taluk, states that the image, representing Śāntinātha, was caused to be made by Māghaṇandī-dēva, the beloved disciple of Harichandra-dēva of Heragu, who belonged to the Ingaḷēśvara line of the Koṇḍakundānvaya of the Pustaka-gachchha of the Dēsiyagaṇa of the Mūla-sangha. The period of the epigraph may be about 1250. A Tamil inscription at Vaḍigēhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1286, records that Pudu-chchēri Mādava-nāyakkar granted to Tiyaḡapperumāl of Vangipuram 125 kulīs of wet land below the big tank at Vaḍugagāmundaṇpalli (Vaḍigēhalli) of Kurukunji-nāḍu. The grant seems to have been made for building a tank for the king. It is worthy of notice that the donor belonged to Pudu-chchēri or Pondicherry. Another at the same village refers to a new tank built by the above mentioned Mādava-nāyakkar at Vaḍugagāmundaṇpalli of Periya-nāḍu in Kurukunji-nāḍu and proceeds to say that the customs officer Mādēvan [did something for it].

VIJAYANAGAR.

84. There are about 15 records of the Vijayanagar period, beginning in the reign of Harihara I and ending in the reign of Śrī-Ranga-Rāya II. They cover a period of nearly 300 years from 1355 to 1660. Two of the records are copper plate inscriptions of Kṛṣṇa-Dēva-Rāya and Venkaṭapati-Rāya I. There is also a copy of a copper grant issued by Śrī-Ranga Rāya II.

Harihara I.

85. An inscription on the west outer wall of the Varadarāja temple at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1355, records that lidēva, son of the pearl merchant (mutṭina) Vayijanna, who was the house merchant of the mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Harihara-Rāya-Oḍeyar and the leader of the ubhaya-nānāśēṣi, and other merchants granted certain dues for the god Varadarāja of Vogaṭṭa.

Harihara II.

86. There are two inscriptions of this king's reign. One of them on the sluice of the tank at Kuṇigal, dated 1394, tells us that the lidēva, son of the pearl merchant (mutṭina) Vayijanna, who was the house merchant of the mahāmaṇḍalēśvara Harihara-Rāya-Oḍeyar and the leader of the ubhaya-nānāśēṣi, and other merchants granted certain dues for the god Varadarāja of Vogaṭṭa. The auspicious time when the pillar of the sluice was set up is given as dhanur-lagna in the 17th ghaṭikā after sun-rise on Friday the first lunar day of the bright fortnight of Bhādra-pada in the year Bhāva corresponding to the Saka year 1316. Though the king is not named here, we know from other records that Irugappa-dāṇḍayaka, author of the Nānārtharatnamālā, was the famous Janna general of Harihara II. The other at Jōḍi-Lakkonḍanahalli, EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 113, dated 1379, which has now been revised, records that when the rājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara, destroyer of hostile kings, champion over kings who break their word, śrī-vīra-Hariyappa-Rāya was ruling the earth, his general Kāntikāraṇāyara-gaṇḍa Nāgaṇṇa-oḍeyar's son Dēvappa-oḍeyar, Rācharasa and the gaṇḍa-prajegaḷ of Hullūr granted, as an aṇṇāhāra, with all the usual rights, Lakkagondaṇahalli alias Rāchchasamudra of Hullūr-nāḍu in Nikarili-Chōḷa-maṇḍala to Maṇḍalapurusha of the Kauśika-gōtra and other mahājanas. The number of ṛittis granted was 17, of which half a ṛitti was to be set apart for the Vishṇu temple of the village.

87. A few more records which fall within the reign of this king, though he is not named in them, may be noticed here. An epigraph on the south basement of the Siva temple at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, which seems to bear the date 1371, tells us that Māreya-nāyaka's son Pammanna granted 5 koḷagas of land in Vogatṭa which belonged to his office of Nāyaka to provide for illumination during the festival of the god Sōmeyadēva of Vogatṭa. Another at the same village, Hoskōṭe 129, dated 1377, which has now been revised, states that the worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Svayambhu-Triyambakadēva of the southern Vārāṇasi resplendent in the circle of the earth filled with all things, . . . purifier of the Kāśyapa-gōtra, . . . maṇḍalāchārya-samsiddha-chakravartī, . . . āchāryavarya, abhanga-rāhuttarāya, Chandrabhūshanadēva-oḍeyar granted certain lands below the tank Marudēri for the god Varadarāja of Bhāgirathipura. It is unfortunate that parts of the inscription are worn. The epithets applied to Chandrabhūshanadēva-oḍeyar show that he was a great teacher.

Kriyāsakti probably identical with Chandrabhūshanadēva-oḍeyar.

Another great teacher of the same period, Kriyāsakti, who is mentioned as the guru of Harihara II in several records, had also the distinctive epithet, worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Svayambhu-Triyambaka (see last year's Report, para 106). I venture to think that the two may be identical. This epigraph gives Bhāgirathipura as another name of Vāgaṭa. A third on the north outer wall of the Varadarāja temple at the same village, dated 1388, records the grant of some land below the big tank at Ogatṭa for the maintenance of a perpetual lamp to be burned before the god Varadarāja of the village. The name of the donor is gone. Mention is made of a sthānika named Kriyāsakti-dēva at the end, which seems to lend some support to the above identification.

Dēva-Rāya II.

88. An inscription at Vāgaṭa, EC, IX Hoskōṭe 130, now revised, seems to record the grant of certain taxes for the god Varadarāja of the village by order of Lakkanna-Oḍeyar during the rule, seated on the jewel throne, of the champion over kings who break their word, śrī-vira-pratāpa-Dēva-Rāya-mahārāya. The mahājanas of Vogatṭa were to carry on this charity for as long as the moon and sun endure. Lakkanna-Oḍeyar was the king's general and the governor of the Muḷbāgal province (see EC, X, Bowringpet 72 and 87). He was a Vīraśaiva by religion and the author of a Kannaḍa poem named Śivatatrachintāmaṇi. The date of the record may be about 1430. Another epigraph at Vaḍigēhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1431, belongs to the same reign, though it does not name the king. It tells us that the . . . linga-chakravartī of Śrīparvata, mahāmaṇḍalika, worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Mahālinga, . . . Cha . . . ayangal of . . . ḷapura granted, as a kaṭṭu-koḍage, 1 khaṇḍuga of wet land to Dēvi-setṭi's son Sivani-setṭi of Ogatṭa for having repaired the breaches and restored the tank at Kaṭi . . . yiliyapura of Hiriyūr-nāḍu. Those who violated this were to be looked upon as traitors to the assembly of Lingāyat gurus of heaven and earth. The donor was evidently a Lingāyat teacher, and it is not clear why the epithet mahāmaṇḍalika is applied to him.

Sāluva Narasinga II or Immaḍi Narasinga.

89. An inscription on the south outer wall of the Varadarāja temple at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1496, belongs to this king of the second Vijayanagar dynasty. It records a grant for the god Varadarāja of Vogatṭa by Krishṇarāya-Oḍeyar, nephew or son-in-law (aliya) of the mahāmaṇḍalēśvara, mēdinimisara-gaṇḍa, Kaṭāri-Sāluva, Sāluva-Immaḍi-Narasinga-Rāya-mahārāya.

Krishṇa-Dēva-Rāya.

90. There are four records of this king including a copper plate inscription received from the Deputy Commissioner of the Mysore District. The latter is said to have been found among the records of the Taluk Treasury at Seringapatam. It consists of three plates, each measuring 10½" by 7", engraved in Nāgari characters, and bears the date 1516. After invocation of Sambhu, the Boar incarnation of Vishṇu and Gaṇapati in separate verses, the record gives the Purāṇic genealogy from the Moon to Turvasu and then proceeds to give the pedigree of Krishṇa-Dēva-Rāya thus:—In the line of Turvasu arose Timma, husband of Dēvaki; his son was Īśvara, husband of Bukkamā ; his son was Narasa, who dammed the Kāvēri, seized the enemy alive and took possession of the Tancha-rājya and Śrīrangapaṭṭaṇa (see last year's Report, para 106) ; subjugated the Chēra and other kings, and made great gifts at Rāmēśvaram and other holy places ; his sons by Tippāji and Nāgalā were Vira-Narasimha and Krishṇa-Rāya. King Vira-Narasimha made various gifts to the temples at Chidambaram and other holy places. On his death Krishṇa-Rāya came to the throne. After describing his glory, valour and liberality, the inscription records that on the 12th lunar day which was a Gōdvādaśi of the bright fortnight of Mārgaśīrsha in the year Dhātu corresponding to the Śaka year 1438, in the presence of the god Virūpāksha on the bank of the Tungabhadra adorned with Hēmakūṭa, the king granted, as a sarvamānya, with all the usual rights, three villages, namely, Chikkabbehalli, together with its three hamlets (named), situated in the Nāgamangala kingdom, Halavumārahosahalli situated in the Chennapaṭṭaṇa kingdom, and Vengēnahalli situated in the Billagondanahalli kingdom, to the virtuous ascetic Vyāsa-tīrtha, disciple of Brahmanya-tīrtha, who had crossed to the other shore of the ocean of the six darśanas and had correctly understood the purport of the Vēdas. Then follow details of boundaries of the villages granted, five of the usual final verses, and the signaure of the king Śrī-Virūpāksha in Kannaḍa characters. Another copper plate inscription in the possession of the Mādhva maṭha at Abbūr (EC, IX, Chennapaṭṭaṇa 153), which has somehow been left untranslated in the Bangalore volume though referred to in the introduction (page 24), and which registers a grant to the same individual by the same king in 1523, may also be noticed here. Its contents are identical with those of the inscription noticed above down to the part recording the grant. It then states that on the 12th lunar day of the month Kārtika in the year Svabhānu corresponding to the Śaka year 1445, in the presence of the god Viṭhalēśvara on the bank of the river Tungabhadra, the king granted, as a sarvamānya, with all the usual rights, the village Talavra....syapalli, together with its two hamlets (named), situated in Honganūru-sthaḷa of Chennapaṭṭaṇa-sime in Kelale-nāḍu, giving it another name Brahmanyatīrthapuri (after the donee's guru), to the establisher of the Vaishnavasiddhānta, expounder of all sciences, possessor of self-restraint, tranquillity, spiritual knowledge and indifference to worldly affairs, the eminent high-souled ascetic Vyāsa-tīrtha, disciple of Brahmanya-tīrtha. And Vyāsa-tīrtha, forming the village into 32 vruttis or shares, bestowed them on his disciples. Then follow details of boundaries of the village in Sanskrit and Kannaḍa. The composer of the grant was Sabhāpati and the engraver Mallana's son Viranāchārya. Like the previous grant this also closes with five of the usual final verses and the signature of the king.

91. The donee of the two grants noticed in the previous para was a great Vyāsatiṛtha. Mādhva guru who founded a maṭha, known as Vyāsa-rāya-maṭha, at Sōsale, Tirumukūḍlu-Narsipūr Taluk.

He was a great scholar and composed three important works bearing on the Dvaita school of philosophy, namely, Nyāyāmṛta, Tarka-tāṇḍava and Chandrikā, which are known among the Mādhvas as the three jewels. His guru Brahmanyatīrtha had his maṭha at Abbūr, Chennapaṭṭaṇa Taluk. According to a work called Vyāsa-vijaya which gives an account of Vyāsa-tīrtha, this is how he became a disciple of Brahmanya-tīrtha :—A woman whose husband was in a moribund condition, was preparing to become a sati, but being dissuaded by her friends and advised to go to Brahmanya-tīrtha, went to him and sought his advice in the matter. He blessed her that she should continue a wife and bear two sons, of whom she was to hand over to him the elder, and live with the younger. On returning home she was surprised to find her husband revived, and according to the sage's prediction she in course of time bore two sons. The elder was brought up in his maṭha by Brahmanya-tīrtha, who consecrated him in his seventh year, giving him the name Vyāsa-tīrtha. He was then sent to Muḷbagal, where he studied for twelve years under another Mādhva guru named Śrīpādarāya, whose maṭha and brindavana or tomb are even now to be found there. According to tradition Śrīpādarāya absolved king Śaḷuva-Narasīnga, the supplanter of the first Vijayanagar dynasty, from the sin of having killed a Brāhman and sat on his throne at his request. A few other details given about Vyāsa-tīrtha in the work mentioned above may be briefly noticed here. While he was at Ānegondi (Vijayanagar), the king was warned of an evil muhūrta approaching, and advised to put some one else on the throne for that time. Not knowing whom to choose, the king sent out his state elephant with a garland, which the animal presented to Vyāsa-tīrtha. The latter was not enamoured at the prospect and said that he being only a mendicant there must be some mistake. But on being pressed, he hid himself in a cave, and the elephant being sent out again, again took the garland to him at the cave. He could not any longer decline the divine summons, and so for the time of the evil muhūrta was appointed to the throne. But in order to make manifest the danger, instead of sitting on the throne, he threw his kāshāya or red cloth on it, which immediately burst into flame and was burnt. He then took his seat on the throne, and in the short time left him signed grants of land to the Brāhmaṇas who had anointed him. He had the large Vyāsaśanūdra tank built on the Mysore and Kaḍapa border. He lived for twelve years at Tirupati, as a result of which the svāmi of the Vyāsarāya maṭha is even now entitled to certain privileges in the temple there. He ended his days at Ānegondi, and his vṛindāvana is at a spot called Nava-vṛindāvana, on an island in the Tungabhadra about half a mile from that place. (See also E C, VII, Introduction, page 41). He was also known as Vyāsarāya. Among the Mādhva gurus Śrīpādarāya and Vyāsarāya appear to be the only two who had the title rāya or rāja (king) added to their names, the reason being that both of them sat on the Vijayanagar throne. At the entrance to the Vyāsarāya-maṭha at Tirupati is a Tamil inscription recording the grant of some privileges to Vyāsarāya by Kṛṣṇa-Dēva-Rāya. For other copper grants in which Vyāsa-tīrtha figures as a donee see EC. VII, Shimoga 85, and Report for 1912, para 107.

92. Of the remaining records of Kṛṣṇa-Dēva-Rāya, an epigraph to the north of the Ānjanēya temple at Vāgaṭa, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1512, states that during the rule, seated on the righteous throne, of Kṛṣṇa-Rāya,....kkana-nāyaka, agent for the affairs of Vira-Narasimha-rāya, made a grant of 5 koḷagas of land. Another near the Māri temple at Dēviṣeṭṭihalli of the same Taluk, dated 1526, records that while the mahā-rājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara śrī-vīrapratāpa-śrī-Kṛṣṇa-Dēva-Rāya-mahārāja was ruling the earth, by order of Dēvarāya, Daḷavāyi Su....nāyaka's son.....pa-nāyaka granted some vṛittis for the god (Varadarāja) of Vogatṭa and the god Varāha, as also to some Brāhmans. A third of the same date, on the south wall of the Chennakēśava temple at Sarjāpura, Ānekal Taluk, which is mostly worn, seems to record the erection or renovation of the temple in that year by.....Gavūḍa, probably Tamme-Gauḍa of Sugatūr.

Venkaṭapati Rāya.

93. Two records relating to this king were copied during the year, one a copper-plate grant, dated 1601, in the possession of Mādayya, manager of Sambappa's maṭha at Sarjāpura, Ānekal Taluk, and the other a stone inscription at Bommanbaṇḍe, Hoskōṭe Taluk. The former consists of 5 plates, each measuring 9" by 7", engraved in Nāgari characters, the language being Sanskrit throughout. Its contents are almost identical with those of E C, XII, Chikkanāyakanhalli 39 and Tumkūr 1, the Dēvanhalli and the Ālangiri plates (Report for 1910, paras 100 and 101), and the Nanjangūḍ plates (Report for 1917, para 115), with regard to the genealogy and details about the kings. Like Chikkanāyakanhalli 39, it opens with obeisance to Venkaṭeśa and invocation of the two feet of Rāma and Vishvaksēna. After the description of the kings it proceeds to record that on the occasion of a lunar eclipse on the full-moon day of the month Pushya in the year Plava corresponding to the Śaka year reckoned by the worlds, the eyes, the arrows and the moon (1523), in the presence of the lotus feet of the god Venkaṭeśa, the king granted, as a sarva-mānya, with all the usual rights, the village Perungolattūru, surnamed Venkaṭarāyapura, situated in Sālavāka-sima of Viṇagunna-koṭṭaka in Ariśūru-nāḍu of Khyatātti-pattu in the Paḍaviḍu kingdom, to the worshipper of the lotus feet of the god Venkaṭeśa, rejoicer in making gifts of food, leader of the Śrīvaiṣṇavas, a prominent member of the Chiruppalli family, the pious truthful Rāmārya of the Bādarāyaṇa-gōtra, Āpastamba-sūtra and Yajus-śākhā, son of Allārya and grandson of Śingarārya. By order of the king the grant was composed by Kāmākshi, son of Kāmakoṭi and grandson of Sabhāpati, and engraved by Kāmāyāchārya, son of Gaṇapaya and younger brother of Viraṇa. After five usual final verses the record closes with the king's signature Śrī-Venkaṭeśa in Kannada characters. The stone inscription of this king, referred to above, which is mostly defaced, seems to record a grant by Nāgaya of Hosahālī in 1609.

Śrī-Ranga-Rāya II.

94. A copy of a copper grant received from the Smārta maṭha of the Bhāgavata-sampradāya at Muḷuvāgil, Tirthahalli Taluk, refers itself to the reign of this king. From a Telugu note at the end of the copy we learn that the original consisted of three plates. But the copy is full of gaps and mistakes. After invocation of the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu and Gaṇapati, it gives the Purāṇic genealogy from the Moon to Turvasu and then proceeds to say that in that (line) arose Śrī-Ranga-Rāya, son of Gōpāla-Rāya and Vengamāmbā. After a few verses in the king's praise it states that on the new-moon day of the month Pushya in the year Śārvari (1660) he made a grant of land to the paramahansa-parivrājākāchārya, worshipper of Viṣṇu, proficient in the Vēdas, Agnimūrdha-Krishṇānanda-yati of Muḷvāyipuri, disciple of Sachchidānanda. The spiritual succession of the maṭha is given thus:—Nārada, Vyāsa, Śuka, Gaudapāda, Gōvinda, Kshīrasvāmi, Viṭhala, Śrīdhara and Viṣṇu-śvāmi. We are then told that Śrī-Ranga-Rāya of the Atri-gōtra and Āpastamba-sūtra, a scion of the Ārviṭi family, son of Gōpāla-Rāja and Vengamāmbā, grandson of Ranga-Rāja and Timmadēvi, and great grandson of Venkaṭēsa and Ramgāmbā, granted, on the occasion of ardhōdaya, with all the usual rights, the two villages Raṇaghata and Hirēkalyāṇi, situated in Belūr-sime, to the ascetic. As it is, the copy is very defective. If it had been correct and complete, it would have furnished valuable information about this very little known maṭha. In my Report for 1916, para 105, is noticed another copper plate inscription in the possession of the Śringēri maṭha, which records the grant of another village named Sūrāpura to the same svāmi by the same king in 1661.

IKKERI.

95. There are only two inscriptions relating to the chiefs of Ikkēri. Both of them are copperplate grants, one issued by Venkaṭappa-Nāyaka II and the other by Bhadrappa-Nāyaka, received from the Smārta maṭha of the Bhāgavata-sampradāya at Muḷuvāgil, Tirthahalli Taluk.

Venkaṭappa-Nāyaka II.

96. The copper grant of Venkaṭappa-Nāyaka II consists of three plates, each measuring $9\frac{1}{4}$ " by $7\frac{1}{2}$ ", the third plate being inscribed on the inner side only. It is dated 1660 and is engraved in Kannāḍa characters. After invocation of Śambhu it records that the Eḍava-Murāri, Kōte-kōlāhala, viśuddha-vaidikādvaita-siddhānta-pratishṭhāpaka, Śivaguru-bhakti-parāyana, Venkaṭappa-Nāyaka, son of Sidappa-Nāyaka, grandson of Sankanna-Nāyaka and great grandson of Keḷadi Sadāśivarāya-Nāyaka, on the occasion of a lunar eclipse on Monday the full-moon day of the bright fortnight of Āśvīja in the year Śārvari corresponding to the Śaka year 1583, in order that his elder brother Śivappa-Nāyaka might abide for ever in Śiva-lōka, granted, with all the usual rights, certain villages in Muduvankanāḍu-sime and Sitūru-sime of the total revenue value of 25 varahas and $1\frac{1}{2}$ hanas (specified with minute details of the items of income) to the paramahansa-parivrājākāchārya-varya, pada-vākya-pramāṇa-pārāvāra-pārīṇa, yamanīyamādyasṭāṅgayōga-nirata, promoter of the doctrines of Viṣṇu-śvāmi, Krishṇānanda-śvāmi, disciple of Kshīrasvāmi-Sachchidānanda-yōgindra of Muḷuvāgil, for carrying on the charities and services of the maṭha built at Munivṛinda on the bank of the Tungabhadra. The villages were to be enjoyed by the donee and his successors for as long as the moon and sun endure. Then follow three usual final verses and the signature of the chief—Śrī-Venkaṭādri.

Bhadrappa-Nāyaka.

97. The plates of Bhadrappa-Nāyaka, referred to in para 95, are seven in number, each plate measuring $10\frac{1}{4}$ " by $7\frac{3}{4}$ ", and are engraved in Kannāḍa characters, the seventh plate being inscribed on the inner side only. The fifth plate is missing, though a copy of its contents is available. The record is dated 1662 and is mostly similar in contents to the grant dealt with in the previous para, the donee, too, being the same individual. After invocation of Śambhu it tells us that the Eḍava-Murāri, etc., (see previous para) Bhadrappa-Nāyaka, son of Sivappa-Nāyaka, grandson of Siddappa-Nāyaka, and great grandson of Keḷadi Sankanna-Nāyaka, on the 2nd lunar day of the bright fortnight of Māgha in the year Plava corresponding to the Śaka year 1584, granted, as a sarvamānya, with all the usual rights, certain villages, situated in the simes or districts of Muduvanka-nāḍu, Sitūru, Hokuḷi, Ālumāni, Muttūru and Gājanūru, of the total revenue value of 2,004 varahas and 3½ hanas (specified with minute details of the items of income), to (with titles as in the previous para) Krishṇānanda-svāmi of Muḷuvāgil, for carrying on the charities and services of the maṭha built at Munivṛinda on the bank of the Tungabhadra and for the upkeep of the temple and agrahāra attached to it. The record closes with five usual final verses and the signature of the chief—Śrī-Sadāśiva. Among the items of income enumerated in the grant with reference to the villages may be mentioned siddāya, birāḍa, mēluvaṇa, habba-gāṇike, besta-gāraka (tax on fishermen), maḍihadike (? tax on washermen), dīva-gāraka (? tax on hunters), banada-sōge, haravari-vartane, uḍugore, kāsāvarga, umbāli-vartane, meṇasina-chhaḍita, kuḷa-birāḍa, ṣeṇabōvana-vartane and maṇihadavara-vartane. Previous grants made to temples, etc., are excluded from the income of each village, and incidentally two grants made by the present chief on the occasion of the lakshadīpārādhane or illumination with 1,00,000 lights at the Nīlakaṇṭhēśvara temple and on the occasion of performing the hiraṇyagarbha gift at Tīrtharājapura are mentioned.

98. It may not be out of place to put together here all the available information about the little known Muḷuvāgil maṭha of the Bhāgavata-sampradāya in Tīrthahalli Taluk. It has to be stated at the outset that there are two maṭhas of the Bhāgavata-sampradāya in the Mysore State, one at Muḷuvāgil, as stated in paras 94, 96 and 97 and one at Talkāḍ, Tirumukūḍlu-Narsipūr Taluk. The svāmis of both the maṭhas claim spiritual descent from Padmapādāchārya, the immediate disciple of Śankarāchārya, who was appointed as the head of the maṭha at Dvārakā by Śankarāchārya himself. According to tradition Agnimūrdha-Krishṇānanda-svāmi, the 27th in spiritual succession to Padmapādāchārya of the Dvārakā maṭha, came to the south about three centuries ago and stayed at Muḷbāgal in the Kōlār District. On the invitation of the Ikkēri chief Bhadrappa-Nāyaka, he went to Tīrthahalli Taluk and founded a maṭha named after Muḷbāgal of the Kōlār District at Bhadrāsamudra, an agrahāra granted to him by the chief. Before leaving for Tīrthahalli, however, he founded a maṭha at Talkāḍ and appointed a svāmi to it. The Muḷuvāgil maṭha claims that the maṭhas at Dvārakā and Talkāḍ are its branches. Some papers in the possession of the maṭha show that its claim was admitted by an assembly of disciples and scholars that met at Surat about 35 years ago. As we saw above, Krishṇānanda-svāmi figures as the donee in four copper plate grants—two issued by Śrī-Ranga-Rāya II in 1660 and 1661 (para 94), one issued by Venkaṭappa-Nāyaka II in 1660 (para 96) and one issued by Bhadrappa-Nāyaka in 1662 (para 97). Munivṛinda of the Ikkēri copper grants is evidently identical with Bhadrāsamudra mentioned above. The svāmi is described in the grants as the promoter of the doctrines of Viṣṇusvāmi who, according to the published succession list of the Dvārakā-maṭha, was the immediate successor of Padmapādāchārya. Both the maṭhas at Muḷuvāgil and Talkāḍ are named after Krishṇānanda-svāmi and the object of worship in both is Gōpālakrishṇa. The maṭha at Talkāḍ is also locally known as the Koppāla maṭha from a village of the name of Koppāla which belongs to it. A record at the maṭha (E C, III, Tirumukūḍlu-Narsipūr 47), said to be a copy of a stone inscription, registers a grant to Agnimūrdha-Krishṇānanda-svāmi by Mādhava-mantri in Śaka 819. But this date is clearly wrong as we know from the copper grants noticed in paras 94, 96 and 97 above that the period of this svāmi was about 1660. It may therefore be concluded that the maṭhas at Muḷuvāgil and Talkāḍ came into existence in about the middle of the 17th century.

The Śuka-bhāṣhya, a commentary on the Brahma-sūtras by Śukāchārya, has been supposed to be the chief authority for the Bhāgavata sect of the Smārta community. It was published in 1892. In a note prefixed to the work it is stated that the author was the founder of the Talkāḍ maṭha. But in the succession list of the maṭha the name Śukāchārya does not occur. Further, as stated in the previous para, the founder of the Talkāḍ maṭha was Krishṇānanda-svāmi, and not Śukāchārya. Nor does the work give any clue as to the connection of its author with the Talkāḍ maṭha. All that can be gathered from it about the author is that he was the disciple of Gōpālakrishṇa, belonged to the Śrīvatsa family and was an incarnation of Śukāchārya, son of Vyāsa. The peculiarity of the work is that it quotes the Bhāgavata-purāṇa along with the Upanishads as its authority in explaining the Brahma-sûtras. The tenor of the whole work is that bhakti or devotion to Vishnu is the only means for attaining salvation. Enquiries addressed to the Muḷuvāgil and Talkād maṭhas as to their acceptance of this work as their authority, as stated in the preface to the printed work, resulted in the repudiation of the work by both the maṭhas. They say that there was no svāmi of the name of Śukāchārya among the successors of Padmapādāchārya, that the Śankara-bhāshya is the work usually studied in them, that the present work is opposed to the teachings of the Śankara-bhāshya, that their Bhāgavata-sampradāya simply means that they are worshippers of Vishnu-panchāyatana instead of Śiva-panchāyatana, and that consequently the Śuka-bhāshya has nothing to do with them. They also state that it is probable that the work in question was written by a follower of the Viśiṣṭādvaita system, though there are some points of difference between the Śuka-bhāshya and the Śrībhāshya of Rāmānujāchārya. I may also add that in case Śukāchārya was a sanyāsi, he would not mention his family or gōtra (Śrīvatsa). The work does not appear to be one of any great antiquity.

SUGATUR.

99. About half a dozen records including a copper plate grant, which relate to the Sugatūr chiefs, were copied during the year. The chiefs represented are Tamme-Gauḍa, Mummaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa, Mummaḍi Chikarāya Tamme-Gauḍa and Śivanapa-Gauḍa. The last appears to be a new chief not hitherto known from other records. The earliest of the inscriptions bears the date 1494.

Tamme-Gauḍa.

100. A copper plate inscription in the possession of Chennavīrabhadra-chāri at Khāji-Hosahalli, Hoskōte Taluk, date 1494, which consists of only one plate, measuring 9" by 4½", records that Tamme-Gauḍa who built Hosakōte, granted, with pouring of water, the village Hosahalli, naming it Ayyana-Hosahalli, to Nijaguna-Sujñānasvāmi of Hosūr in order to procure for himself the four objects of human existence, namely, virtue, wealth, desire and final emancipation. Before making the grant the donor had boundary stones marked with a linga set up around the village. Future kings are requested not to violate the grant, and it is stated that by maintaining it they will acquire prosperity and the merit of having performed ganārādhane. Whoever covets this shall incur the guilt of the five great sins. The witnesses were the sun, the moon and the fire. The record closes with the expression Śivārṇita (dedicated to Śiva) engraved in characters of a larger size. This inscription makes it clear that Hosakōte was built before 1494 and the statement that it was built in 1595 (Mysore, II, 75) has therefore to be revised.

Immaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa

101. A worn inscription in Dodda Nagappa's field at Bhaktarhalli, Hoskōte Taluk, seems to record a grant to Basava-gauḍa's son..... by Immaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa. The date of the record appears to be 1558.

Mummaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa

102. An epigraph at Gonakanhalli, Hoskōte Taluk, tells us that Mummaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa of Sugatūr had a maṭha erected for Gurubasavaṇṇa, son of Sejjē Siddhalinga-dēva, a member of the great assembly of Lingāyat gurus. The record is not dated; but EC, IX, Ānekal 47 of the same chief, which bears the date 1614, gives a clue to its period. This chief was a great scholar and poet. He has written Mummaḍi Tamme-Gauḍa a scholar and poet. His Kannada work named Śankara-samhite is a big poem consisting of 4100 shatpadī verses. In this work he states that he ought not to be reckoned among those chiefs who get works written by their court poets and pass them off as their own. His other works are stated to be Rājēndrachōla-charite, Kumārārjunīya and Saundarēśa-charite in Telugu; Kaumudī-vyākhyāna and Rasikamanōranjana in Sanskrit; and a yakshagāna or rustic play in Kannada. He had also a voluminous work styled Śivadarpaṇa composed by Brāhmans. His parents were disciples of the Vīraśaiva teacher Sujñānamūrti. In another place it is stated that the Sugatūr family rose to eminence by the grace of Sujñānamūrti-dēśika. We saw in para 100 Tamme-Gauḍa making a grant to Sujñānadēva in 1494. It is thus clear that this line of teachers formed the hereditary gurus of the Sugatūr chiefs.

Mummaḍi Chikarāya-Tamme-Gauḍa

103. A fragmentary Telugu inscription near the idqā at Hoskōṭe, which appears to be dated in 1668, records a grant to.....oḍeya by this chief. EC, IX, Hoskōṭe 105, of 1693, appears to be a record of this chief's grandson.

Śivanapa-Gauḍa

104. There are two records of this chief, one at Bisanhalli and the other at Kaṭigēnhalli, both in Hoskōṭe Taluk. The former registers the grant of a field, as a keṛe-koḍage, by Śivanapa-Gavuḍa to Kempanṇa-gavuḍa of Baśilanahaḷi; while the latter records that Śivaneya-Gauḍa of Sugatūr, making obeisance, granted a maṭha to the virtuous Virakṭa...ya-dēva, possessed of the pure Śivāchāra. From the second record it is clear that this chief belongs to the Sugatūr family, though his name has not been met with in the hitherto published inscriptions of that family. The first epigraph is dated in the cyclic year Vyaya, which may provisionally be taken for 1706.

KALALE.

105. A copy of a Telugu inscription found in a palm leaf manuscript in the possession of Sivarama Sastri at Ānekal, dated 1711, refers incidentally to Vīra-Rājayyagāru as the grantor of certain vr̥ittis. It is very probable that this Vīra-Rājayya is identical with his namesake of the Kaḷale family. The inscription records a sale-deed executed by Umāpati-śāstri, son of Venkaṭakrishṇa-śāstri and grandson of Akshantala Nārāyaṇa-bhaṭṭa, in favour of Ayyambhaṭṭa, son of Śēshambhaṭṭa and grandson of Akshantala (here some space is left blank). Umāpati-śāstri sold for 110 Kaṇṭirāyi varahas, with all the usual rights, one-half vr̥itti that came to his share out of the two vr̥ittis that had been granted to his father by mahārājaśrī Vīra-Rājayyagāru in the agrahāra of Torapalle, surnamed Doḍḍarāya-samudra. Both the seller and the buyer are stated to be of the Kāśyapa-gōtra, Āpastamba-sūtra and Yajuś-śākhā. The buyer was also entitled to the house-sites, taxes, etc., in the village, which pertained to the half share purchased by him. The surname of the village lends strong support to the above identification. Doḍḍa-Rāja was the father of the Kaḷale chief Vīra-Rāja, and the latter must have granted the village in memory of his father.

THE MUGHALS.

106. A Persian sanad in the possession of Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao of the Comptroller's Office, Bangalore, refers itself to the reign of the Mughal emperor Shāh Ālam II. The front bears two seals at the top and the text of the order below, while the back has several bits of writing consisting of notes made by the officers. The seals name the emperor and an officer, and give the Hijri date. The writing in the first seal is in six lines which run thus—

Shāh Ālam Bahādur
Bādshāhi Ghāzī Sulaimān iqtidār fidvī
Āsaf Jah Nizāmu-l-Mulk Nizāmu
-d-Daulāh Mīr Nizām Alī Khān (1174)
Bahādur

Fath Jang Sipāh Sālār Yār-i-vafadār;
while that in the second, which is in five lines, is as follows—1176.

Shāh Ālam Bādshāhi Ghāzī
Samsām Jang fidvī
Samsāmu-d-Daulāh Mīr Abdu-l-Haīy Khān Bahādur
Samsāmu-l-Mulk

In the first seal the Nizām acknowledges the suzerainty of the Delhi emperor. Yār-i-vafadār means "the Faithful Ally". The date which is partly defaced corresponds to A. D. 1760. The officer named in the second seal was the prime minister of the Deccan under the first Āsaf Jah. He died in the fort of Kaulas in A. H. 1196 (1782). In those days the sanad for prime-ministership was granted by the Delhi emperor, and so the prime minister instead of styling himself the devoted servant of the Nizām styled himself the devoted servant of the emperor. Samsāmu-l-Mulk, a common title in the Deccan, means "the sword of the State". The date given corresponds to A. D. 1762.

The order which opens with an expression meaning "He is Bountiful," is addressed to the Dêsmukhs, the Dêspândes, the Muqaddams, the inhabitants and the cultivators of the sarkâr Koramkonda, tâlluqa Karnâtak, (suba Farkhandâ Bunyâd), telling them that the office of Sarmajmû'adâri (Chief Collector of Revenue) has been conferred on Râmarâv, son of Kônêri-râv, on his agreeing to these conditions:—(1) that he should make an annual present of rupees two thousand to the Imperial Government; (2) that he should deposit one-fourth of the total amount in cash at the treasury of the Fauji Firôzi (Victorious Army); (3) that he should pay the balance by regular instalments at the above mentioned treasury; (4) that he was entitled to collect one hun on every hundred huns as rusûm (fee), and to take four pâ'ili out of each khandi of land-produce (as his share) in addition to the assessed revenue; and (5) that he should submit the official statements according to the prescribed rules year by year to the Imperial Court;— and that they should regard Râma-râv as the permanent Sarmajmû'adâr of the aforesaid sarkâr and permit him to collect the fees described above.

Written on the 25th Zî Qâdah, in the 8th year (1766) of the auspicious reign. Fair copy.

107. The bits of writing on the back may be rendered thus:—

Official note. The office of Sarmajmû'adâri of sarkâr Koramkonda, tâlluqa Karnâtak, suba . . . , on these conditions (1) the payment in cash of one-fourth of the total amount (due from him) at the treasury of the Victorious Army and (2) the rest by regular instalments, and (3) the collection of a rusûm of a hun on every hundred huns, according to the permission note duly signed, has been entrusted to Râma-râv, son of Kônêri-râv. Signed. Navâb Mustatâb . . . Âsaf Jah Nizâmu-l-Mulk Nizâmu-d-Daulâh . . . the sanad be granted.

Detail of permission note, duly signed, dated 22nd Zî Qâdah in the 8th year of the auspicious reign.

. . . Kônêri-râv submits that the office of Sarmajmû'adâri of sarkâr Koramkonda, tâlluqa Bâlâghât Karnâtak, suba Farkhandâ Bunyâd, with these rusûms (1) collection of one hun on every hundred huns and (2) taking of four pâ'ili out of every khandi of produce, has been held by him for a long time. He also possesses a sanad bearing the seal of Abdu-n-Nabi Khân Bahâdur alias Abdul Halîm Khân, a copy of which bearing the special seal has been submitted to the Imperial Court. He now states that he does not get even one-tenth of his rusûm owing to the unsettled condition of the tenants and the tyranny of the Mahrâtas, and is expectant of Imperial munificence and favour . . . the above office be given to Râma-râv on the usual conditions and on his agreeing to make a present of Rs. 2,000 of which one-fourth was to be paid in cash at the treasury of the Victorious Army and the rest deposited at the same treasury by regular instalments.

The conditions of the office being recorded, Râma-râv prays for a sanad.

As the sanad relating to the office of Sarmajmû'adâri of sarkâr &c. (as above) has not been received and as also the report of the officers of the suba is not to be found, the particulars relating to the office cannot be determined.

The copy of the sanad granted by Abdu-n-Nabi Khân and bearing the special seal has been sent to the Imperial office. Deposited at the Central Treasury under the charge of Muhammad Qamru-d-din, Treasurer, Rs. 516-9 on account of the present of Râma-râv, son of Kônêri-râv, Sarmajmû'adâr of Karnâtak, suba Farkhandâ Bunyâd. Dated 29th Zî Qâdah, Regnal year 8.

Hundreds 5, odd 16-9, total 516-9.

The diary of the above-mentioned (Râma-râv), son of Kônêri-râv, who has been honored by the rank of five hundred and fifty horse and the title of Rai, bearing the seal of Khânkhânan Fakhru-l-Mulk Iftikhâru-d-Daulâh Muhammad Akbar Khân Bahâdur Hizabr Jang, Bakhshi of the province of the Deccan, reached the Imperial office on the 30th Shavvâl, 8th regnal year.

A further note adds that on the 17th Zî Hijja, 9th regnal year, this was recorded in the Imperial Register and in the diary of the "Issue Branch", and that a copy was received on the same date in the Department of Arrears of Presents.

These notes give us a glimpse into the administrative machinery and the official procedure of the Mughal period. The owner of the sanad, Mr. M. R. Annaji Rao, is a lineal descendant of the Sarmajmû'adâr Râma-râv. I have to express my

- acknowledgments to Mr. G. Yazdani, M. A., Nazim, Archæological Department, Hyderabad State, for his kind help in the decipherment of this Persian sanad.

THE MAHRATTAS.

108. Two Mahrāṭhi sanads in the possession of Vithalesvara Subbaraya, the archaka of the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe, refer themselves to the rule of the Mahrāṭtas. One of them, issued by Raghunātha Bāvāji, Subedār of Hosakōṭā-paragaṇā, is addressed to Rāma-bhaṭṭa, son of Mudgal-bhaṭṭa, and tells him that on a representation made to the Pēshwa about the upkeep of the Viṭhalēśvara temple in which the god had been set up, he was pleased to order the grant of the village Turugalūr in Mālūr Taluk of the revenue value of 42½ varahas for the purpose, and asks him to conduct the services in the temple and pray for the prosperity of the Pēshwa. The other sanad is addressed by the same officer to the Dēsamukhas and Dēsapāṇḍes of the paragaṇā giving them intimation of the grant of the village, and asking them to have the sanad entered in the daftar and to hand over the original to the archaka. The god was set up by Raghunātha Bāvāji in accordance with the orders of the Pēshwa, and the image was sent along with Mudgal-bhaṭṭa's son Rāma-bhaṭṭa of Aḷandi near Poona. The present archaka Subbarāya is a lineal descendant of Rāma-bhaṭṭa. The period of the sanads may be about 1760.

MYSORE.

109. A good number of records relating to the kings of Mysore was copied during the year. They include a copper plate grant and range in date from about 1720 to 1858. The majority of them are in the form of sanads, nirūps or letters issued during the reign of Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III. One of the inscriptions records the gift of a large bell to a Lingāyat temple by a Muhammadan Amildar during the rule of Tippu. An epigraph of Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III gives a long account of the piety and travels all over India of a Mādhva devotee named Subbarāya-dāsa.

Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar I.

110. An inscription on a bell in the Siddhalingēśvara temple at Eḍeyūr, Kuṇigal Taluk, states that the bell was a present from Mīnākshamma, wife of Daḷavāyi Basava-Rājaiya. Though the king is not named in the record, we know from EC, IV, Yedatore 58, of 1741, that Nanja-Rājaiya, son of the above-mentioned Basava-Rājaiya and Mīnākshamma, was the sarvādhikāri in the latter part of the reign of this king. The date of the record may be about 1720.

Tippu.

111. Two inscriptions on two bells in the Siddhalingēśvara temple at Eḍeyūr, Kuṇigal Taluk, tell us that the bells were presented to Siddhalingēśvara-svāmi by Jāpara-Kāna Bommaṇi, Āmila of Bādaśaha Tipu Sulatāna.

Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III.

112. A large number of records of this king, consisting mostly of sanads and letters and ranging in date from 1800 to 1858, was copied during the year. They include three sanads or nirūps issued by Pūrṇaiya with his usual seal in Nāgari characters (see last year's Report, para 135). One of these in the possession of Subbarāya, archaka of the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe, addressed to Krishṇarāya, Amildar of Tyākal, tells him that out of the estimated revenue of 10 varahas and 1 haṇa of the village Turugalūr belonging to the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe (see para 108) in his Taluk, the tasdik of 5 varahas and 9 haṇas formerly settled for the temple has to be deducted and the balance of 4 varahas and 2 haṇas collected from Rāma-bhaṭṭa, the archaka of the temple, every year; and asks him to make over the village to Rāma-bhaṭṭa and to see that the services in the temple are regularly performed. The record is dated in 1800. It is not clear why the revenue of the village, which was 42½ varahas in about 1760 (para 108), fell off so much in the interval. Another in the possession of Abdul Razak, Shekdar of Sarjāpura, Ānekal Taluk, bearing the same date, is addressed to Rāmaiya, Amildar of Ānekal, intimating that orders have been passed to the effect that an inām of 6 varahas should be granted to the takiyattadār fakīr Shamsuddīn residing in his Taluk, and telling him to grant the same either in cash or in land according to the wishes of the donee. The third, dated 1801, in the possession of Abdul Khuddus, the caretaker of Khājīsāb's mosque at Gubbi, is addressed to Appājaiya, Āmila of Gubbi, ordering him to grant to Mokhadum Shâh, Khâji of Gubbi, land with an annual assessment of 1 varaha and 7½ hanas? in place of the two khaṇḍugas of wet land which he had been enjoying. Two records in the possession of Ramacharya, archaka of the Kô-dandārâma temple at Sarjâpura, Ânekal Taluk, dated 1803, state that when the rājādhirāja rāja-mārtāṇḍa Kṛishṇa-Rāja-Voḍeyaraiya, seated on the jewel throne, was ruling the earth, the Padinasāle and Paḍasāle (weavers) of Sarjâpura agreed among themselves to pay 1 kāsu (pie) for every cloth manufactured and sold by them in order to provide for the daily, fortnightly, monthly and yearly festivals of the gods Kôdandārâma and Anjanēya of Sarjâpura; and that the other prajegaḷ of Sarjâpura agreed to pay 1 hana for each family every year to provide for lamps, etc. for the same gods. Each record has two usual final verses and a long list of signatures at the end. A sanad in the possession of the Muḷuvāgil maṭha, Tirthahalli Taluk (para 98), dated 1812, is written in three languages, namely, Persian, Maḥ-rāṭhi and Kannāḍa, and addressed to the Âmilas, the Śīrastedârs, the Mokhaddams and the inhabitants of the sarkār Nagara, telling them that Kṛishṇānanda-svāmi of the Bhāgavata-sampradāya, residing at Muḷabāgil in Marala-Sītūr-māgaṇi of Nagara-tālōka, who had been enjoying lands of the revenue value of 160 Haidari varahas and 3 hanas, was subsequently required to pay a jōḍi of 33 varahas and 6½ hanas; and that on the representation of the svāmi in person that the balance left after the payment of the jōḍi did not suffice for the upkeep of the maṭha, the jōḍi has been excused. The sanad was to be copied in the Śīrastedâr's register and the original handed over to the svāmi. The latter was not to be asked to produce a new sanad every year. The signature of the king—Śrī-Kṛishṇa—comes at the end. The sanad was written by the Hajūr Munshi Rāma-rāv. It bears at the top the usual seal of the king in Nāgari characters giving his name with that of his father.

113. Among other records of this king, a nirūp in the possession of Kasi Subbanna, Shanbog of Sarjâpura, Ânekal Taluk, dated 1812, which is addressed to Rāmaiya, Amildar of Hosakōṭe etc., states:—"Your letter intimating the removal from his office of Shanbog Guṇḍayya of Sarjâpura on account of the loud complaints of the raiyats against his oppression and the appointment of Sītārāmayya in his place has been received. You did well in dismissing this oppressor of the poor raiyats. As you say that nearly fifty varahas are still due from him to the sarkār, put him in confinement, collect the money without the least mercy and make a report about the matter." Another in the possession of Subbarāya, archaka of the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe, dated 1815, issued by Lingarājaiya-arasu, Fauzdâr of Bengalûru, to Rāmaiya, Âmila of Mālûr, refers to a scrutiny held by the Fauzdâr into the former sanads relating to the jōḍi village Turugalûr in Kuḍiyānûr-sammatu of Mālûr tālûka, in accordance with a general order received from Hajūr to the effect that the papers pertaining to the jōḍi villages enjoyed by Brāhman in the several taluks should be examined and directions issued to the Amildars to act in accordance with the result of the examination. The papers examined by the Fauzdâr in connection with the village in question were (1) a sanad issued by Raghunātha Bāvāji granting the village, as a sarvamānya, to the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe (para 108); (2) another addressed to the Dēśainukhas and the Dēśapāṇḍes by the same person directing them to treat the village as a sarvamānya; (3) a tākīd issued in 1800 by Divān Pūrṇaiya to Kṛishṇarāya, Âmila of Tyākāl, directing him to collect a jōḍi of 4 varahas and 2 hanas from Rāma-bhaṭṭa, archaka of the above-mentioned temple (para 112); and (4) a nirūp issued in 1811 from Hajūr to Âmila Rāmaiya telling him to continue the jōḍi village in accordance with the previous sanad. He then orders the Amildar to collect the jōḍi from Rāma-bhaṭṭa as noted in the Divān's tākīd and to see that the village is exempt from such troubles as bīṭṭi (forced labour) and bēgārī. This tākīd was to be entered in the Śīrastedâr's register and the original handed over to the Brāhman. The signature of the Fauzdâr—Śrī-Rāma—comes at the end. At the top of the record is a seal containing three lines in Nāgari characters which run thus:—(1) Śrī-Kṛishṇa (2) Pinōja-kachêri (3) Bengalûru. Another nirūp in the possession of Kasi Subbanna, Shanbog of Sarjâpura, issued in 1820 to Appūrāya, Âmila of Sarjâpura, states that a complaint has been received from Appājaiya, the long-standing Shanbog of Dodḍa Timmasandra in Sarjâpura Taluk, to the effect that Rāmaiya, a distant agnate of his, is now causing trouble by asserting his claim to the office of Shanbog, and directs him to hold an enquiry and give the post to the proper claimant. Another, dated 1821, in the possession of Rāmāchārya, archaka of the Kōḍaṇḍarāma temple at Sarjāpura, is addressed to Chennarāyappa, archaka of the Rāma temple at Sarjāpura, by Subedār Appūrāya. It tells him that in accordance with a nirūp received from Hajūr lands of the revenue value of 3 varahas have been granted to provide for offerings and festivals in the temple and directs him to take possession of the lands and perform the services regularly. At the top of the sanad occurs the syllable Dē, supposed to be the initial of king Chikka-Dēva-Rāja-Oḍeyar, between the sun and the crescent. Another, in the possession of Subbaraya, archaka of the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe, issued in 1830 by Divān Venkaṭarājaiya-arasu to Biḷigiraiya, Amildar of Mālūr, intimates the receipt of a petition from Appanna-bhaṭṭa of Hosakōṭe stating that formerly the village Turugalūr in Mālūr Taluk had been granted as a sarvamānya to the Viṭhalēśvara temple, that subsequently it was ordered by Pūrṇaiya that a jōḍi of 4 varahas and 2 haṇas should be collected (see above) and that there has now been raised an objection to hold the village on payment of the above jōḍi, and directs him to allow the village to be enjoyed by the temple as before on payment of the jōḍi as ordered in Pūrṇaiya's tākīd. The signature of the Divān-Śrī-Rāma-appears at the close. The seal at the top contains these four lines in Kannada characters: (1) Śrī (2) Śrī-Krishṇa Di (3)-vāna kachē (4)-ri Hujūr. Another in the possession of Ramacharya, archaka of the Kōḍaṇḍarāma temple at Sarjāpura, issued in 1833 by Bāpūrāya, Fauzdār of Bangalore, to Śēshayya, Āmila of Sarjāpura, directs him to pay out of the customs revenue 2 duḍḍus (8 pies) every day to the Rāma temple for purchasing camphor and incense. Another in the possession of the same individual, bearing the same date, is issued by Āmila Śēshayya to Chennarāyappa, archaka of the Rāma temple, giving intimation of the above order. This record also bears the syllable Dē at the top.

114. A Sanskrit inscription on the gold umbrella of His Highness the Maharaja's throne in the Mysore Palace, consisting of 24 anushtubh verses, invokes blessings on Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III. It is addressed to the king. After a rhetorical description of the umbrella in two verses it prays that all the gods, including the planets, and the eight regents of the directions who are described with their attributes and vehicles, and the goddesses may give their blessings to the king seated on his hereditary jewel throne. The umbrella is thus described:—"Afraid of defeat by the spotless moon of your fame, the moon serves you in the guise of an umbrella. Treating with contempt the brilliance of the sun by the power of your patronage, the moon of your umbrella causes joy at all times to the circle of the earth (otherwise to the lilies)." Then the record proceeds to invoke blessings thus:—"May Brahma, Vishṇu and Mahēśa together with their Śaktis protect you day and night. May Vāni give you eloquence, Lakshmi great wealth and Sarva-mangalā good fortune. May the thirty-three crores of gods, the Viśvêdēvas, the Vasus, the Rudras, and the Ādityas protect you seated on the throne. May Sūrya give you glory, Chandra fame, Mangala good fortune, Budha loveliness, Guru wisdom, Śukra statesmanship, Sani happiness, Rāhu strength of arm and Kētu eminence. May Durgā, Gaṇēśa, Kshêtrapāla and Vāstōshpati protect you on all sides. May Indra, seated on Airāvata and bearing the thunderbolt, increase your wealth. May the seven-handed Agni, seated on the rain and holding sruk, sruva and other weapons, give you glory. May Dharmarāja, seated on the buffalo and possessed of daṇḍa and other weapons, give you an abiding love of dharma. May Nairṛita, armed with the mace and seated on a man, remove your fear of evil spirits. May Varuṇa, seated on the crocodile and possessed of the noose and other weapons, give you peace of mind and purity. May Vāyu, seated on the antelope and bearing the winnow, grant you health and strength. May Kubêra, armed with the sword and seated on the horse, give you undiminishing treasure. May Īśāna, seated on the bull and bearing the trident and other weapons, give you long life." The record closes with an exhortation to the king that he will maintain the path of dharma followed by Dilīpa, Sagara, Rāma, Harischandra and Naḷa. For an old description of the Mysore throne see last year's Report, para 145.

115. The remaining records of this king, about 18 in number, are mostly connected with the Prasanna-Venkaṭaramanasvāmi temple in Mysore and Subbarāya-dāsa, its founder. The earliest of them is dated 1821 and the latest 1858. Barring three inscriptions which are on stone in the above-mentioned temple, all the others are sanads excepting one which is a copper grant. These latter are in the possession of Mr. Raghavendra-dāsa, the manager of the temple, who is a lineal descendant of Subbarāya-dāsa. Though not the first in choronological order, a sanad issued by the king in 1836 to Subbarāya-dāsa may be dealt with first as it gives details of Subbarāya-dāsa's pious acts and travels all over India, which are repeated almost verbatim in a stone inscription of about the same date in the temple. It is a long roll consisting of 11 sheets of paper joined together with the king's seal at every joint and is styled a dāna-patrike or gift-deed. It opens thus:—On Saturday the fifth lunar day of the bright fortnight of Āśvija in the year Durmukhi corresponding to the Śaka year 1758, the rājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara praudha-pratāpa apratima-vīra-narapati, birud-ent-embara-gaṇḍa, sole hero of the world, a moon to the milk ocean the Yadu race, possessor of the insignia of among others the conch, the discus, the elephant-goat, the axe, the makara, the fish, the śarabha, the sālva, the gaṇḍabhērūṇḍa, the boar, Hanumān, Garuḍa and the lion, Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Vaḍeyar, seated on the resplendent jewel throne on which Rājākshiti-pāla and other paramount kings descended from the lunar race had successively sat in the great Mahiṣūra-samsthāna, the abode of the wealth of the Kārṇāṭaka country, which was an ornament of all the countries that adorned the whole circle of the earth, gave a dāna-patrike to the devotee of the god Venkaṭēśa, Subbarāya-dāsa alias Gōpāla-dāsa as follows. Then follows a long recital of the miracles performed, badges of honor obtained, pious acts done, and journeys made all over India by the donee. It may be summarised thus:—

When formerly Subbarāya-dāsa was an official at the Inner Gate (Oḷa-bāgilu) of the Palace, the king's step-mother Lakshmammanni granted to him a bhatta-mānya at Ānandūr and his queen of Kṛṣṇavilāsa a vṛitti. While he was living in the house given to him in the Kṛṣṇavilāsa-agrahāra, a severe epidemic of cholera broke out in the city in 1827 counting a large number of inhabitants among its victims. The god Venkaṭēśa used to manifest himself to him, and when sore at heart for the calamity he lay unconscious giving up food and drink, the learned and pious and travels.

Diggāmi Śrīnivāsāchārya, appearing in a dream, handed to him three pieces of charcoal (angāra), a Kaṇṭirāyi hana and some colored grains of rice (mantrākshate), telling him that their use would cure the patients and avert the epidemic. He accordingly cured a large number of people suffering from the disease by giving them holy charcoal water (angāra-tīrtha) and mantrākshate and thus restored the city to its former healthy condition. On some people expressing a doubt about the truth of the matter, the king, prompted by the god Venkaṭēśa, went to him and saw his performance, during the worship of the god, of the torch-service (panjina-sēve) with a torch given to him by Bangalore Śāmāchārya who had been directed to do so in a dream, and other feats. On the invitation of the king he went to the Palace the next day taking with him the god Venkaṭēśa and performed worship in the Glass Hall (Kannadi-tōṭṭi), at the conclusion of which the king presented to him the anklet (gaggara) of the royal horse and a silver bell as badges of honor. Soon after he went to Bangalore, and while staying there was directed in a dream to get the images of Śrīnivāsa and Kṛṣṇa in the possession of Śīnappanāyaka-Bāḷappanāyaka who was likewise directed in a dream to hand over the images which had been left with him 30 years ago by Diggāmi Śrīnivāsāchārya. By the power of these images, on the holy occasion of the summer solstice, water issued from the plastered floor of Subbarāya-modali's choultry at Halasūr-pēṭe and flowed for four days. This marvel was witnessed by all people and reported to Timmappa-rājaiya, Fauzdār of Bangalore, who proceeded to the spot and expressing astonishment at the sight sent some of the water by a Brāhman to Hajūr. He then proceeded to Tirupati and stayed there for three months paying homage to god Śrīnivāsa, who told the temple managers in dreams which they all had simultaneously to show him due honors. Accordingly, Arcot Venkaṭarāya, the Subedār, presented him with an anklet, and a Garuḍagamba at the time of the torch-service, from the temple; Kōṭikanyādāna Tātāchārya with a pair of metal horns (tiruchina); and Tolappa-Varadāchārya with a gold lion's-head (simha-lalāṭa), a discus, as well as 20 kuntes of land in Mallāvāra, his sarvamānya village. He then returned to Mysore with all the insignia and stayed at the Triṇayanēśvara temple for nine months, and, the king having in the meantime enlarged his house in the Kṛṣṇavilāsa-agrahāra and set up the god Vēnugōpāla, removed to it and stopped there for two months. On his informing the king soon after that he had been directed in a dream to go on a pilgrimage to the Ganges, the king gave him permission, though with great reluctance; he then put three double handfuls of rice mixed with pearls and rubies into his alms-bowl, presented him with a gold chain adorned with bells and a silver anklet, and granted these insignia for his god—a palankeen, two silver sticks, a pair of chauris, an umbrella, a white parasol, a pair of round fans (śūripāna), a horse with a double drum, an elephant with a lace banner, and a camel; he further gave him a rahadāri or passport addressed to all the district officers directing them to afford him all assistance during his journey, and had a similar rahadāri written by Khāsamējor Sāheb (Casamaijor), Resident in the State, for his journey in the Company's Dominions.

116. Subbarāya-dāsa then left Mysore for Sōsale where Vidyāpūrṇa-svāmi gave him the badge of a cord of straw (hullusarave-birudu). From there he travelled to Śringēri where, on seeing his badges of honor, Narasimha-Bhārati-svāmi was greatly pleased and said that they were appropriate to him. He then went to Udupi, paid homage to the god Kṛishṇa and received the blessings of all the svāmis. The svāmi of Kṛishṇāpura presented him with a gong, the svāmi of Pēchāvāra with a hand-lamp and a Nārāyaṇārti, the svāmi of Sirūr with a trumpet, the svāmi of Puttige with an image of Hayagrīva, and the svāmi of Kānanūr with an image of Venkatēśa flanked by consorts. After visiting Satyadharma-svāmi at Holēhonnūr, he journeyed to Kollāpur via Paṇḍrāpura, Nāsika, Tryambaka Ōnkāra and Chōli-Mahēśvara, and received from the ruler of the State whose wishes were fulfilled a? surāti with an inscription as a mark of honor. At Indore he was presented by Hōlkar Mallāri-Rāya with a chauri with the name Mārtāṇḍa inscribed on it. He then reached Kāśi by way of Ujjani, Chitrakūṭa and Prayāga, set up the gods Vēṇugōpāla and Hanumān in the Vyāsarāyamāṭha built by him near the Hanumān temple in Hanumanta-ghāt, as also a linga in the Śiva temple erected by the Mysore king, and informed his guru of the matter, who, being pleased, gave him the surname of Gōpāla-dāsa. After visiting Gayā he went to Brahmāvarta where he was presented by Śrīmanta Bāji-Rāya with a gold bracelet. He then travelled to Badarikāśrama via Janakapura, Ayōdhyā, Naimiśāranya, Gaṇḍaki, Gōmati, Parikshita-gaḍa, Hastināpuri, Jvālāpuri, Kaṇakala-kshētra, Haridvāra and other holy places and returned to Lashkar Gvālēr passing through Kurukshētra, Madhurā, Gōkula-Bṛindāvana, Balarāma-kshētra, Bharatapura and Nandigrāma. At Gvālēr he received five silver kalāṣas or finials for his palankeen from Bājā-bāyi, consort of Mahaji Sindhya; at Jānsi an elephant with a kettle-drum from Śrīmanta Vināyaka-Rāya; at Nāgapuri a silver simha-lalāṭa adorned with a bell and engraved with an inscription for his plankeen from Raghōji Bhōsale in 1832; at Haiderābād an inscribed mōrchāl and a rahadāri from Rājā Chandū-Lāl; at Gaddavāl, after passing through Mantrālaya and Hampe-Virūpāksha, a pearl necklace for his god and a rahadāri; and at Kannavalu, after bathing in the Kṛishṇa, the Tungabhadra and the Nivṛitti-sangama and visiting Bhuvanēndra-svāmi of the Rāghavēndra-svami-māṭha at Rāghavēndrapura, a cap adorned with a gold finial from the Navāba. He then visited Tirupati, Ghaṭikāchala and Kānchi, and went to Channapaṭṭana, where the Board gave him a rahadāri written in four languages informing their officers that Subbarāya-dāsa was going on a pilgrimage to Rāmēśvara and other places with 60 Brāhmins, 30 Śūdras, 20 foot-soldiers, 1 palankeen, 2 elephants, 16 horses, 3 camels, 20 pack-bullocks, and swords and guns, and that he should be allowed to travel without any obstruction. With this and other rahadāris granted by Casamaijor, the Mysore Resident, the collectors and other officers of the Company's Dominions and the Chiefs of Ārni and other places he travelled to Chidambara, Māyūra and Śankhamukhi and then reached Kumbhakōṇa.

117. At Kumbhakōṇa he set up Hanumān in Kollam Śrīnivāsarāya's bungalow on the bank of the Kāvēri, which his wife with the consent of her children had bestowed upon him with a gift-deed, and when after this he was going in the? Dabīr street with all his insignia, some scholars treated him with indifference, but, having realised his greatness in a dream, three of them, namely, Mannār Kṛishṇāchār, Māyūr Kṛishṇamūrtyāchār and Haiderābād Chittagubbi Rāmāchār, composed an ashtaka (or poem of eight verses) each in his praise and offered them to him. He then went to Navā-tirupati and Ālvār-Tirunavalli, set up a white marble figure of Hanumān in the big street of Agraḥāra on the way to Rāmēśvara, bathed at Sētu, visited Kanyākumāri, Anantaśayana, and Janārdana, received a monkey-flag and a Garuḍa-flag from the svāmi at Tōtādri, made over the land granted by queen

Gangā-bāyi to the god Hanumān set up by him behind the Venkaṭēśvara temple on the bank of the Aṇu-Tāmraparni at Tirunavalli, visited Śrīranga, went to Sōsale to pay respects to his guru, and returned to Mysore with all his insignia 1835. The king sent for him and being highly pleased on seeing all the insignia and letters and on hearing accounts of his travels presented him with a gold bracelet adorned with a bell. Sometime after, at his request, the king caused to be built a temple on the site of the 20th house in Krishṇavilāsa-agrahāra, a pond named Śrīnivāsa-pushkarīṇi and a car, set up the god Prasanna-Venkaṭēśa in 1836, presented vessels, vehicles and other articles required for the temple, made a monthly grant of Rs. 100 for the festivals and the feeding of Brāhmins and set up a stone inscription in the temple. The king's signature Śrī-Krishṇa comes at the end. The grant was written by Aramane Subbarāya.

118. The stone inscription referred to at the close of the last para, which is at the sides of the sukhanāsi entrance, is almost identical in contents with the sanad dealt with in paras 115-117 but for a few slight variations and some additions at the end. It is stated here that Tōlappa-Varadāchārya also gave him an image of Nārāyaṇa with consorts, the grant of land, here said to be 25 kuṇṭes, made by him being intended for the worship of this god; that Subbarāya-dāsa made a gift of this land to Dharmāchārya, grandson of Diggāmi Śrīnivāsāchārya; that he received the surati at Kollāpūr from Chenchīṇi Nānā Sāhib; and that he was presented with a pair of spears covered with bear-skin by the chief of Punganūr. The epigraph refers to the grant of the sanad mentioned above and adds the following items of information:—Subbarāya-dāsa and his elder brother Śīnappa-dāsa built, for the spiritual welfare of their parents and for the increase of the king's prosperity, an agrahāra, named Subbarāyadāsa's agrahāra, in front of the Prasanna-Venkaṭēśa temple. It consisted of nine houses, one of which was to be a feeding house, two, residences of the archaka of the Hanumān shrine and of the yajamāna, the others being given to Brāhmins (named) who were to conduct the services in the temple. The yajamāna was given the bhaṭṭa-mānya at Ānandūr which Subbarāya-dāsa had received from Lakshmammaṇṇi (para 115) and the others lands of the revenue value of 6 varahas each out of his vritti at Mōdūr in Attikuppe Taluk. If the contributions from the devotees were less than one rupee, the archaka was entitled to them; in case they exceeded that amount, they were to be handed over to the yajamāna to be utilised for the expenses of the temple. This grant was made by Subbarāya-dāsa in 1838. The epigraph goes on to say that the king was greatly pleased on seeing the grant and gave this śilā-śāsana to Subbarāya-dāsa calling upon him to preserve all the insignia obtained by the grace of the god Prasanna-Venkaṭēśa, to have a portrait statue of his opposite to the god, to carry on the services and festivals of the temple and to live happily praying for the prosperity of the donor. The writer of the grant was Kadīm Venkaṭarāya of Chikadēvarāyadurga. The record closes with the king's signature. As reference is made to Subbarāya-dāsa's grant of 1838, this inscription must have been put on stone in that year or at a later period.

At the top of the stone is a later addition stating that on the occasion of a solar eclipse on Thursday the new moon day in Mārgaśīra of the year Śōbhakṛitu (1843) the king ordered an annual grant of 36 Kaṇṭirāyi varahas from the Treasury to Subbarāya-dāsa for the upkeep of the feeding-house at Bīlikere, and that on the same occasion his son made an annual grant of 24 varahas, and his son-in-law Lingarājaiya-arasu an annual grant of 12 varahas, for the same purpose. It is stated that all the three have affixed their signatures.

119. Of the remaining two stone inscriptions in the temple, the one over the doorway of the Hanumān shrine, dated 1836, records that when śrī-Krishṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar, seated on the jewel throne, was ruling the earth, Subbarāya-dāsa alias Gōpāla-dāsa, with the consent of his elder brother Śīnappa-dāsa, for his own spiritual welfare and for the merit of the king, made a gift to God of the house favoured to him in Krishṇavilāsa-agrahāra, the Prasanna-Venkaṭēśa temple, the painted hall, the car, the pond, the grove, the agrahāra in front of the temple, the Hanumān shrine, the Rāma shrine and other subsidiary buildings, all of which owed their existence to the king's generosity. Details about this matter might be learnt from the stone inscription of the temple. Here too we have the king's signature. The other inscription at the sides of the portrait statuette of Subbarāya-dāsa states —“May Venkaṭēśa be gracious. This is the portrait statuette of Subbarāya-dāsa alias Gôpâla-dâsa, the devotee of the god Prasanna-Venkatêsa. The attitude of the figure represents the surrender to God of all the charities and (even) the body." The copper plate grant alluded to in para 115 consists of only one plate measuring 1' 2" by 7". It bears the date 1838 and records that when (with titles as in para 115) Krishṇa-Râja-Oḍeyar was ruling the earth, Śrinivâsa-dâsa and Subbarâya-dâsa alias Gôpâla-dâsa, sons of Sitârâmaiya and grandsons of Subbaiya of the Maudgalya-gôtra Âśvalâyana-sûtra and Rik-śâkhâ, during the Navarâtri festival, granted, for the spiritual welfare of their parents, for the increase of the king's prosperity and for the pleasure of the god Venkatêsa, a vritti together with a house furnished with all necessities, to Bâbâ Sâmnâchâr, son of Śrinivâsâchâr and grandson of Subramanyâchâr of the Haridrasa-gôtra and Âpastamba-sûtra. Then follow details as given in paras 115, 117 and 118 about the construction of the Prasanna-Venkatêśvara temple etc., in the house formerly received by Subbarâya-dâsa from Krishṇavilâsa-Sannidhâna and about the agrahâra, here named Subrahmanya-agrahâra, built by him. The donee was to get lands of the revenue value of 6 varahas, his duties being the recitation of the Sâma-vêda and officiating as Purôhit in the Prasanna-Venkatêśvara temple. In case there was no hitch in the discharge of the duties assigned to him, he was entitled to sell, exchange, mortgage or give away the lands. The record closes with two usual final verses and the signatures of the king, Śrinivâsa-dâsa and Subbarâya-dâsa. One of the final verses may be rendered thus:—May those fortunate people who are devoted to the feet of their parents, who are well-born, who are possessed of brothers, wife and sons, who are intent on the worship of God, who are desirous of the position of an emperor, protect these charities.

120. Of the remaining records which are all, as stated in para 115, in the possession of Mr. Raghavendra-dâsa, the manager of the Prasanna-Venkataramana temple in Mysore, a sanad, dated 1821, records the grant of a vritti and a house to Subbarâya-dâsa by Lingâjammanni of Krishṇavilâsa-Sannidhâna, queen of Krishṇa-Râja-Oḍeyar III. The grant of this vritti and house has been alluded to more than once in the foregoing paras. The sanad is a pretty long roll consisting of 6 sheets of paper joined together with the king's seal at every joint. It has also a rare seal of the king at the top, which contains an anushtubh verse in four lines in Nâgari characters, giving his name and that of his father. The lines run thus:—

Châmunḍikâ-sêvaka-śrî-Châmarâjâbdhi-janmanah
śrî-Krishṇanripa-chandrasya
kalâ sêvânurûpiṇi

After invocation of the goddess Châmunḍikâ and the Boar incarnation of Vishṇu, it records that the moonlight to the lily Krishṇavilâsa, Lingâjammanni, the lawful wife of (with titles as in para 115) Krishṇa-Râja-Oḍeyar of Mahisûr, son of Châma-Râja-Vaḍayar and grandson of Immaḍi Krishṇa-Râja-Vaḍayar of the Âtrêya gôtra Âśvalâyana-sûtra and Rik-śâkhâ, on Thursday the first lunar day of the bright fortnight of Asvija in the year Vishu corresponding to the Śaka year 1743, with the consent of her husband, granted, as a sarvamânya, with all rights and taxes, for the pleasure of Châmunḍêśvari whose foot-stool was illumined by the cluster of rays of the jewel crowns of all the gods and demons, one vritti out of the twenty-one formed of four villages (named) in Attiguppe Taluk for the Lingamâmbâ-agrahâra founded by her for the increase of her good fortune on the bank of the Kâvēri near the village Chandagâla in Mahisûru-Ashtagrâma Taluk, together with a house furnished with all necessities, to Subbarâya, son of Râmaiya and grandson of Vâsudêvaiya of the Maudgalya-gôtra Âśvalâyana-sûtra and Rik-śâkhâ. It is stated that the king and queen decorated the donee and his wife with ornaments before making the grant. One of the 21 vrittis was reserved for the god Hayagriva of the Parakâla-maṭha situated in the agrahâra, the others being bestowed on Brâhmans. An order was also sent with the king's signature to the Âmila of the Taluk directing him to make over the vrittis to the donees. The vrittidârs were to conduct a special festival of the god Hayagriva of the Parakâla-maṭha on the anniversary of the king's birthday, the second lunar day of the dark fortnight of Âshâdha coupled with the asterism Śravaṇa, out of the miscellaneous income (bâjê-bâbu) of their vrittis. Among the sources of income named may be mentioned kempu-nâlu, śânâya, êru-kâṇike, nâma-kâṇike, guru-kâṇike, jâtikûṭa, samayâchâra, charâdâya, horâdâya, maḍḍi-patanga, śige-poppali, maravali and maddika. The record closes with five usual final verses and the signature of the queen Śrī-Rāma. The grant was written by Bhāgavata Nāraṇappa, the Hajūr Munshi. It is not clear why the names of the father and grandfather of the donee given here differ from those mentioned in the copper grant noticed in the previous para. Another record connected with the one noticed above is a dhruva-undige or assessment roll, dated 1822, giving minute details of the items of income of the vritti granted to Subbarāya by the queen. The donee is called Subbarāya of the Kitchen hall (Adige-totti) and his vritti is said to be in the village Mōdūru and the 8th of the 21.

121. Three of the records are rahadāris granted to Subbarāya-dāsa by the Bangalore Fauzdār Timmapparājaiya-arasu, the king, and the Nagar Fauzdār Virarājaiya-arasu in 1828, 1829 and 1830 respectively. The first, addressed to the Āmilas and Killedārs of Aramanesime-gadis, informs them that, the god Venkaṭa-ramaṇa of Tirupati having manifested himself to him, Subbarāya-dāsa went to Tirupati and is now on his way back to Mysore, and directs them to receive him with due honors, lodge him in a suitable place, give him the necessary supplies, look after his convenience, and when leaving the place send four men to accompany him to the next stage. The second, addressed to the same officers as also to those of the customs department, intimates that Subbarāya-dāsa to whom the god Venkaṭeśa is gracious goes on a pilgrimage to Uḍupi and thence to the Ganges taking with him 60 Brāhmanas, 20 Śūdras, 10 weapons, 1 elephant, 16 horses, 6 bullocks, a palankeen with the god Venkaṭeśa, and a parasol, chauris, flags and other insignia; and orders that they, along with the leading men of the place, should go out and receive him and his god with a band of music and other honors, lodge him in a safe and convenient place, supply him with all the necessary things (specified) obtaining a receipt which was to be sent to Hajūr for payment, and send four peons up to the limit of their jurisdiction. The customs officers were to allow him to pass without demanding any tolls. The stages within the State for the journey to Uḍupi and from there to Kāśi are given thus—Sōsale, Ashta-grāma, Lakshmaṇa-tirthakatte, Yedatore, Bhērya, Narsipura, Kauśika, Hāssan, Vālatore, Bēlūr, Vastāre, Khāṇḍya, Lakkavalli, Tirthahalli and Āgumbe; and Āgumbe, Tirthahalli, Śivamogge, Honnāli and Harihara. The third rahadāri, addressed to the Āmilas and Killedārs of Holehonnūr and Honnāli, gives them intimation of the pilgrimage to the Ganges of Subbarāya-dāsa to whom the god Venkaṭeśa is gracious, refers them to the Hajūr rahadāri and is similar in contents to the first with regard to the remaining portion. Six more are nirūps issued by the king to or in favor of Subbarāya-dāsa. One of them, dated 1830, refers to a letter received from him from Shimoga about the misconduct of Harikār Timmappa who was ordered to accompany him and about the non-receipt of his own pay and the sanctioned special supplies on Saturdays, and states in reply that an order has been sent to the Nagar Fauzdār to arrange for some one else taking the thing (apparently ashes) to the Ganges in company with him and to send back Timmappa to Hajūr, that he must see that the thing is deposited in the Ganges, and that orders have been issued for handing over his pay of 10 varahas as Palace Pandit and the Saturday supplies to his elder brother Śinappa. He was also asked to write on leaving Shimoga. Another, of 1837, addressed to the Treasury Department, refers to Subbarāya-dāsa's pilgrimage to Kāśi and other places and the construction of the temple, etc., in the house granted to him in Krishnavilāsa-agrahāra, intimates a monthly grant of 30 varahas for carrying on the various festivals in the temple, and orders the payment of the amount either monthly or yearly to Subbarāya-dāsa or his agent. Another, dated 1838, addressed to Subbarāya-dāsa, says;—"It is a long time since you left Mysore on a pilgrimage to Tirupati. As requested by you at the time of your departure, the stone mason Chaudāchāri has been ordered to complete the work of the temple. I learn from Śinappa that the services in the temple are being regularly performed and that one-half of the temple grant is being sent to you for feeding Brāhmanas. The Saturday supplies from the Lakshmi-vilāsa and Krishnavilāsa have been ordered to be given as before. When you go to Bangalore enquire on our behalf about the welfare of Kollam Venkaṭarāya, Śēshagirirāya, Rāmasvāmi, Śūrappa, Jivānarāya, Annappa, Anche-Subbarāya and Kuppanṇa. Our state of health is in the same condition as it was when you left Mysore." This letter shows how kind and considerate the king was to his dependants. The seal at the top has a gandabhērunda in it. Another, of 1843, states that when (with titles as in para 115) Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar was ruling the earth seated on the jewel throne, he made an annual grant of 36 varahas for the maintenance of the feeding-house and the Jaya-Venkaṭeśa temple founded by Subbarāya-dāsa at Bilikere for the convenience of pilgrims proceeding to Uḍupi, Subrahmanya and Tala-Kāvēri. It is also added that Buddhiavaru and Aḷiya Lingarāja-arasu likewise made an annual grant of 24 and 12 varahas respectively for the same purpose. This grant also appears as an additional note in the long stone inscription of the Prasanna-Venkaṭarama temple (see end of para 118). Another, issued to Subbarāya-dāsa in 1853, refers to a complaint made by him about the reduction of the monthly grant to his temple from 30 to 20 varahas, and tells him in reply that the balance of 10 varahas is reserved for the expenses of the annual car festival and the feeding of Brāhmans on the occasion. Another, issued to him in 1858, refers to another complaint made by him about a requisition from the Treasury Bhakshi calling upon him to submit periodical accounts of the expenditure of the temple, and states in reply that the Bhakshi has been ordered not to demand the submission of accounts. It also informs him that the king will soon pay a visit to the temple.

One more record that deserves notice, though not a sanad, is an undated autograph letter of condolence addressed by the king to Subbarāya-dāsa who seems to have suffered some sad bereavement. It is a pathetic letter giving unmistakable proof of the depth of attachment which the king had for his faithful dependants. We are not told what the nature of the bereavement was, but it caused so much grief to Subbarāya-dāsa that he appears to have made up his mind to leave Mysore for good. The king asks him to stay with him and to try to give up the grief. He says—“You have been subjected to unending sorrow which you did not deserve. I look upon your grief as my grief. Think of me and console yourself. I have no trusted friend like you. I have tested you in every way and you have stood every test. It will be a relief to me if you remain with me till the close of the daśā or aspect of the planets to which I am subject at present. Your wife must be bowed down with overwhelming grief. Please offer her my condolences and console her. If you yourself give way to grief, what will be the fate of the other members of your family? I therefore conjure you to console yourself in the interests of your family and for my sake.”

122. A word may be said here about some of the other rahadāris and letters received by Subbarāya-dāsa, which were alluded to in paras 115 and 116. The rahadāri granted by Casamaijor, the Mysore Resident, is dated the 7th December 1829. There is also one in Mahrāthi granted by Greme, the Resident in Lucknow, in 1831. The Telugu rahadāri of Kārvēṭnagar was issued in 1833 by the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara Bommarāja Bahādur Dēva-mahārājulu. The seal, like that of Vijayanagar, has a boar below and a dagger above between the sun and the crescent. The one given at Nāgapura, which is in Mahrāthi, bears the signature of Raghōji Bhōsle Sēnā-Sāhib. The seal contains an anushtubh verse in six lines of Nāgari characters, which means “This is the seal of Bāba’s son Gaṇapa, a bee at the lotus feet of Sāha-Rāja.” The verse runs thus—

Śāha-rāja-padāmbhōja-bhramarāyita-chētasah |
Bābātmaṇḍasya mudraishā Gaṇapasya virājatē ||

The Ārni and the Soṇḍūr rahadāris, which are both in Mahrāthi, were granted by Abhinava Pūrṇa-priya Śrīnivāsarāv Sāhib and Śivarāv Hindūrāv Ghōrpaḍe Mamalakatamadār Sēnāpati respectively. The Tamil one of Travancore was issued by Divān Subbavaiyar in the Kollam year 1010 (1835). The Punganūr rahadāri, dated 1832, which is also in Mahrāthi, mentions the ruler as Rāje Sugatūr Tukadi Pedachik Rāyal Yaśōvant Bahādur. A Telugu letter addressed to Subbarāya-dāsa in 1833 by Tirumala-Kunāra-Tōlappāchārya-Varada-Tātāchāryulu informs him that the god of Tirupati is gracious to him and that as directed by the god in a dream he presents him with a simha-lalāta for his palankeen and a pair of metal horns. The donor, described as the establisher of the Vēdic path and the promoter of both the Vēdāntas (Sanskrit and Tamil), refers to the long pilgrimages of the donee and the rahadāris received by him from various governments. Another of the same date from the same individual records the grant of 20 guṇṭas of land to Subbarāya-dāsa. This land is stated to be a portion of the 200 guṇṭas being enjoyed by the donor as a sarvamānya in Mallavara belonging to the Krishnāpuram-ilākhā. Finally, a nirūp from Vidyāpūrṇatīrtha-śrīpāda, lord of the throne of learning of Vyāsarāya (para 91), dated 1846, records an annual grant of 6 varahas for the upkeep of the feeding-house at Bilikere founded by Subbarāya-dāsa (see previous para). The donor was a svāmi of the Vyāsarāya-maṭha at Sōsale.

MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS.

123. A few of the records which cannot be assigned to any specific dynasty of kings may be noticed here. An inscription in characters of the 12th century on the lintel of the sukhanāsi doorway of the Śāntiśvara-basti at Niṭṭūr, Gubbi Taluk, states that the images on the doorway were made by Maḷeya, (son) of Mālave. A Tamil inscription in Śāsanada-biḍu to the south of Ānekal says—"This is the maḍam (or monastery) of Periyadēvan who is pleased to wash the feet of". Then follows the usual imprecatory sentence. EC, IX, Ānekal 54 also refers to this maḍam and the svāmi is named Periyadēva-mudaliyār. The date of the record may be about 1200. Two Tamil epigraphs on the pillars of the navaranga of the Chennakēśava temple at Hāragadde, Ānekal Taluk, state that those pillars were the gifts of Tiruvanandālvār of Śeruppalli and Puḷiyālvār of Muppuram. These records may be assigned to about 1300. Another Tamil epigraph in a field to the east of Koṇḍarhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, tells us that the champion over the three, a Hanuma in crushing (his enemies), a royal warrior, an emperor in fight with the dagger, the mahāmaṇḍaliśvara Murāri-dēvaraśar's son Pammarāśan granted in the year Manmatha, as a kaṭṭuk-kuḍangai, 3 kaṇḍugas of land below the big tank at Nonḍanguli to Attachcha-gavaṇḍan. As another record of this chief, EC, X, Kōlār 173, is dated 1321, the Manmatha of the present inscription has to be taken to represent 1355. These titles were subsequently assumed by the chiefs of Ummattūr. An inscription in the enclosure of the Śāntiśvara-basti at Niṭṭūr, Gubbi Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1380, is a Jaina epitaph (nisidi) recording the death of Śivanaha-seṭṭi. Another at Karibiranhosalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, dated 1563, seems to record a grant to Hampiya-oḍeyar. Three copper plate inscriptions received from Lakshmīśēna-bhaṭṭāraka-paṭṭāchārya of the Basti-maṭha at Singan-gadde, Narasimharājapura Taluk, are sale-deeds executed by Chennavirappa-oḍeyar of Dānivāsa, son of Chikkavirappa-oḍeyar and grandson of Chennarāya-oḍeyar, in favor of Virasēna-dēva, disciple of Guṇabhadra-dēva who was the disciple of Samantabhadra-dēva of Gērasoppe. Each plate measures 10" by 7". The grants are dated 1584, 1585 and 1587. In two cases the lands sold are said to have escheated to the palace owing to failure of heirs. In the first case 9 khaṇḍugas of land were sold for 32 varahas, and in the second 8 khaṇḍugas of land for 30 varahas. In the third grant 10 khaṇḍugas of land were sold for 40 varahas. All the inscriptions open with an invocation of Śambhu and close with the signature of the seller. The lands were to be enjoyed with all the usual rights by the purchaser and his descendants in spiritual succession. The imprecatory sentence in all runs thus—"He who covets this shall be an outcaste both in the world of men and the world of gods. He shall incur the sin of having killed women and cows." About the price it is stated that it was suited to the time, settled by arbitrators and agreed to by both the parties, and about the coins that they were sound, solid and current at the time. Chennavirappa-oḍeyar seems to have been a chief of some standing. From EC, XII, Kuṇigal 49 we learn that he and his wife Parvatamma caused to be erected the maṭha of Tōṇṭada-svāmi at Eḍeyūr. Along with the plates noticed above were also received the originals of EC, VI, Koppa 21-24 which are printed from hand copies. Koppa 21, now revised, states that Chennarāya-oḍeyar of Dānivāsa granted 30 khaṇḍugas of land to Samantabhadra-dēva of Gērasoppe in return for a tribute (kāṇike) of 120 varahas paid by him to the palace. Chennarāya-oḍeyar being the grandfather of Chennavirappa-oḍeyar and Samantabhadra-dēva the guru's guru of Virasēna-dēva, the given date of this record, namely, Śaka 1355 Śukla, is clearly wrong. The date intended is evidently A. D. 1509.

124. An inscription on the lamp-pillar behind the Hanumān temple at Aremāranhalli, Gubbi Taluk, which appears to be dated in 1590, states that the pillar was set up by Boppeya-nāyaka, son of Māreya-nāyaka, for the god Tiruven-galanātha. The pillar was prepared by the sculptor Māragūli. Another in Raman-na's field to the south-west of Chikkondanhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, tells us that Daṇḍi-seṭṭi, son of Choka-seṭṭi, granted for the god Bayiradēva the 17 koḷagas of land which he had received from the king as a kaṭṭu-koḍage. The period of the record may be about 1600. Another in front of the Hanumān temple at Lakshmī-pura, Kuṇigal Taluk, dated 1619, says that Kaḷasa-gavuḍa's son Lakkana-gavuḍa founded the village Lakshmīpura and set up the gods Hanumān and Basavaṇṇa. The inscription closes with the remark that oxen should not be yoked to the plough on Mondays. Another on the north outer wall of the Narasimha temple at Kuṇigal refers to some particular pole and says that as measured by that pole a kamba of wet land within the limits of Bisagūr measures 33 poles and a kamba of dry land 46 poles. Another on the pedestal of the processional image of the Ādinārāyaṇa temple at Hutridurga, Kuṇigal Taluk, says that the image was the gift of the kandāchāra or police force. An epigraph at Hosahalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, which seems to be dated in 1682, states that Yaḷache-gavuḍa was granted some land as kōṭe-kōḍagi and that he was to take care of the kōṭe or fort. Three inscriptions on the floor of the Śankarēśvara temple on the summit of Hutridurga record the names of three visitors, namely, Lingārāsa's (son) Nanjaya, Sankrandana-dēva and Karirāma. The period of these records may be about 1700. An epigraph at Beṭṭāhalli, Kuṇigal Taluk, tells us that the village was granted by Dēvarāja-oḍeyar for the upkeep of the feeding-house at Amritūr. It is not clear who this chief was. Another at Goṇakanhalli, Hoskōṭe Taluk, which appears to bear the date 1703, records the grant of the village as surugu-mānya to Rānāji-Venkāji. EC, IX, Ānekal 3, now revised, states that Hāfiz Muhammad Khān Sāheb gave a field, exempt from taxes, to Mohabat Shāh Bakāti for the kabarastān or tomb. A sanad in the possession of Kāṣi Subbanna, Shanbog of Sarjāpura, Ānekal Taluk, issued by Hāfiz Muhammad Khān to Shanbog Venkayya of Sarjāpura, intimates that a house has been granted as inām to Nāraṇappa, and directs him not to demand any tax from him. This was to be copied in the daftar and the original given to Nāraṇappa. The record bears the Hijri date 1184 (1770). Hāfiz Muhammad Khān is said to have obtained Sarjāpura and a few neighbouring villages as a jāgīr from the Mughal emperor. Two records in the possession of Subbaraya, archaka of the Viṭhalēśvara temple at Hoskōṭe, both dated 1772, register the grant of some dues (specified) for the expenses of offerings, lamps, etc., in the Viṭhalēśvara temple. One of them refers to the erection of the temple by Subedār Raghunātha Bāvāji (para 108), and among the donors are named Nāyib Subbarāv Hāvāji, the Dēśamukha of Hosakōṭe-paragane, Dēśapāṇḍe Bālakrishṇa-Gōvinda-rāya and Venkanna, the Kulakarni of the kasabe. In the other the donors were Virattaiya-ṣeṭṭi and other merchants of the bārāmārga. An inscription on the brass-plated pedestal of Sarvāṇṇayaksha and Kūshmāṇḍayakshiṇi in the Śāntiśvara-basti at Mysore, states that the plate was the gift of Marīnāgaiya, son of Danikāra Padmaia. The period of this record is about 1815 (see last year's Report, para 138). A modern epigraph at Bidanagere, Kuṇigal Taluk, dated the 1st January 1877, says—"This is the charity of Tirumala-gauḍa's son Tōpa-gauḍa of Bidnagere, Kuṇigal Taluk. This is the road to Bengalūru. May god protect (the charity)." Four more epigraphs at the same place, said to have been engraved by Tōpa-gauḍa, are of some interest as they afford evidence of the influence of Christian missionaries (see para 33). One of them states "God alone is the guru of the world. Tōpa-gauḍa wrote this"; another says "To just rulers (and) to bribe-taking slaves idolatry is useless"; another states "The devout will not bow to images"; and the fourth says "The devout incessantly worship the creator of the world."

2. Manuscripts.

125. Some of the manuscripts examined during the year under report have already been briefly referred to in paras 13, 20, 31, 35 and 38. Among the works contained in the manuscripts examined, the following may be mentioned as worthy of notice:—(1) Kālasiddhānta by Chandrachūḍa, son of? Bhūdrīśyaṇana-śarma and Jānakyambā; (2) a commentary on Gaurijātaka by Yallaya-gaṇaka, son of Śrīdhara; (3) a commentary styled Śravaṇānandini on Saṅgītagaṅgādhara by Kāṣīpati-paṇḍita, who was also the author of Mukundānanda-bhāṇa and a commentary on Śabdamaṇi, named Nayakalpataru; (4) Daivajñadarpaṇa by Buchchanna of the Bhāradvāja-gōtra and Āśvalāyana-sūtra, belonging to the Vellāla family, son of Pinatimma, grandson of Appa and great grandson of Sarvadēva; (5) Bhāvārtharatnākara, a work on astrology; (6) Yōgavidyāgama by Sahajānanda; (7) a commentary named Darpaṇa on Vāsavadattā by Timmana; (8) a Telugu commentary on Sakalabharatasangraha; (9) Rāmāyaṇa-rahasya by Vidyāraṇya; (10) Jñānasarvasva-sangraha; (11) Śaivabhūṣhaṇa, described as Śivāgama-vachōratnāñchitam bhūṣaṇam ; (12) Svātmānandaprakāśikā-stōtra by Dakṣiṇāmūrti ; (13) Rasamanjari by Bhānu, son of Gaṇeśvara ; (14) Śankarachampu by Lakṣmīpati of the Akshantala family, son of Venkaṭarāma-sūri and a resident of Kōlāhala-nagara ; (15) Samhitāratnākara, a work on Vaikhāṇasāgama ; (16) Nyāyavilāsa, a commentary on the Tatvaprabōdhini, by Viśvanātha, son of Yallayārya ; (17) a commentary on Dhananjaya's Rāghavapāṇḍaviya by Nēnichandra, disciple of Dēvanandi who was the disciple of the ṣaṭṭarka-chakravartī Vinayachandrapāṇḍita ; (18) Sangrānavijayōdaya, a work on astrology ; (19) a Kannaḍa commentary on the Vṛttaratnākara ; (20) a commentary styled Vārdhichandrōdaya on Vijayasūri's Śringārāṇavachandrike by Dēvachandra ; (21) Śivalīlāṇava, also called Śivapadakamalarēṇusahasra, by Kaḷale Nanja-Rāja, son of Vira-Rāja ; (22) a commentary named Vidvanmanōharā on the Vidagdhamukhamāṇḍana by Kāyastha Tārachandra ; (23) Siddhānta-muktāvalī by Anantabhaṭṭāchārya ; (24) Brahmasūtra-tātparyārtha-prakāśikā by Subrahmaṇyādhvari, a resident of Siddhamallapura on the bank of the Tāmraparṇi, son of Śativāṭiśa and Mīnākshi and disciple of Rāmayajvā ; (25) Prasangaratnāvalī by Pōtambhaṭṭa ; (26) Kavikarṇabhūṣaṇa by Dēvaṇārya, son of Viṭhapāmātya of Kāñchi ; and (27) Advaitasudhārasa, a Kannaḍa work by the paramahansa-parivrājakāchārya Avadhūta-Śivayōgindra.

126. Of the other manuscripts examined during the year, Śivacharita is a Sanskrit poem in praise of Śiva by Kavivādisēkhara of the Kauśika-gōtra. The author praises Kālīdāsa, Haradatta and Kshēmēndra, and states that he was the first to be anointed to the throne in the presence of the god Ēkāmranātha at Kāñchi for the exposition of the tenets of the school of Śrikantha. Vaidyarājavallabha is a Sanskrit work on medicine by Lakshmanāchārya, who styles himself the prāñāchārya of Bukka, son of the Vijayanagar king Harihara II. The author gives on account of the Vijayanagar kings down to his patron Bukka II who is stated to have conquered the Āndhra kings. The work may be assigned to the beginning of the 15th century. Sobaginasōne is a Kannaḍa poem in the sāṅgatyā metre, consisting of a number of romantic stories, by Dēpa, son of the Vijayanagar prince Kampa, probably the second of that name. The work probably belongs to the early part of the 15th century. The author has also rendered the Amaruka-śataka into Kannaḍa verse. Jūānachandra-charite is a Kannaḍa poem also in the sāṅgatyā metre, giving an account of the Jaina prince Jūānachandra, composed in 1659 by the Jaina poet Pāyanaṇavarni, disciple of Paṇḍitāchārya. The poet, who was a native of Śravaṇa Belgōḷa, states that originally the story was written in Prākṛit by Vāsavachandra, that it was subsequently rendered into Kannaḍa ṣaṭpadi by Pūjyapādayōgi, and that his own work written in sāṅgatyā is based on the ṣaṭpadi work.

General Remarks.

127. It is satisfactory to note that the illustrations of architecture and sculpture, the iconographic notes, the references to the popular beliefs and traditions connected with the antiquities and the notices of newly discovered early records of historical importance in these Reports are greatly appreciated by scholars in India, Europe and America. One scholar writes to me from England: "I congratulate you on your phenomenal energy and success in carrying on your researches. The results are most valuable from every point of view—art, history, antiquarian studies, and philology alike. I am particularly glad to read that there is a prospect of having an index of the Reports. It would be most valuable to all of us. I sincerely hope you will be successful in inducing the authorities to preserve ancient monuments. It would be monstrous if these precious structures, which embody the nation's highest ideals of religion and art, were allowed through neglect to fall into ruin." Another scholar writes: "As usual your Report is replete with interest. I congratulate you again on the beautiful photographs. The early pages of the Report dealing with the resurvey of the four districts is a perfect archæological Gazetteer and a mine of information. I am very glad to see that you propose, at an early date, to prepare an index. It would greatly add to the value of the Survey." Another writes: "Your Report is good as usual. Perhaps it has less startling novelties than some of its predecessors, but it is all of value. You have drawn attention to the more important discoveries so that it is needless to repeat your observations. Page 4, the explanation of the hands on sati stones is new to me. Page 10, I never heard of Nidugal before. Page 12, the Śaka date gives a good fixed point for Ganga chronology. Page 30, I am glad to hear of the proposed Index, and the Supplement to Volume IX of the Epigraphia Carnatica. Page 51, "Tancha" for Tanjore is new to me. Your Reports read with others supply a gigantic mass of material for the history of the South, which is becoming unmanageable." Another again writes: "Your Report contains some inscriptions of importance and bears ample evidence of the zeal and success with which you carry on your archaeological labours." Another still writes: "The most interesting of the new discoveries are the Ganga records. The stone inscription of Śripurusha extends his reign very considerably beyond what there were records for previously. Still 62 is not an impossible length for a reign, for Nripatunga had one as long. The identification of Tumbevāḍi (para 14) is important. The identification again of Tancha-rājya with Tanjore (para 106) is very interesting and important. The sentence always seemed faulty in construction but no such explanation occurred to any one. The whole thing is now plain and helps the history. As usual your illustrations are first-rate. I am particularly struck and pleased with the figure Plate IV, 2. It is most characteristic and illuminating." One more scholar writes: "The Report is a most valuable summary of your archaeological work." Another writes from Scotland: "Your Report appears not to fall short in interest and value of its predecessors and I offer you most sincere congratulations on this new evidence of your unremitting care in your work."

A scholar writes from Holland: "I am very pleased to see from your Report that you are continuing your investigations in the field of archaeology with undiminished vigour and success." Another writes from Norway: "Your Report is, as usual, a store of useful information arranged and discussed in a masterly way." Another writes from France: "Your Report is very interesting and valuable." Another writes from Switzerland: "I am very glad to have your Report, especially on account of the Arabic inscriptions from Sira." Another writes from Denmark: "I have to thank you for your admirable Annual Report which always appears so promptly and contains such excellent material. This year I have been specially interested in the very fine temple at Arsikere which seems to be of considerable architectural importance. I should be very much obliged for any photographs you have of it, especially of the very remarkable porch. The Report fully maintains the very high standard you have set yourself and you must earn the grateful thanks of all Indianists for your indefatigable efforts which year after year produce such excellent results." Another writes from Chicago, America: "Your Report was of much interest to me. I was especially interested in the early Punnāḍ plate. It is my constant hope that early inscriptions will be found in Southern India to corroborate and supplement the Greek and Latin accounts. The Report is splendidly edited and beautifully printed. The plates are admirable. Mysore is to be heartily congratulated for the part it is playing in the decipherment of Indian history."

A European scholar in India writes:—"Your Reports are always for me a source of intense enjoyment, but the last one, I must say, has afforded me still greater pleasure than its predecessors as in reading it I was able to follow almost every detail having visited most of those wonderful droogs of which you give such a vivid description. These Mysore droogs I have always held are most fascinating, but the interest one is bound to feel in them is increased a hundred fold when one has the good fortune to study them with one of your reports in hand. You give life to a dead past, more especially when you unearth many an antiquarian gem which otherwise might be lost to posterity. May I add that I am always struck by the unerring sagacity with which you chronicle the beliefs and traditions which people have woven round each notable spot of theirs, be it shrine, hill spring, or virakkal. Your epigraphical discoveries during the year will fill up a gap in the little known history of the Kadambas. When the History of Southern India comes to be written your Reports will be for the future historian a mine of information for which posterity will be thankful, as your friends and admirers are grateful to you now for the most enjoyable hours you allow them to spend in your company, year after year. I congratulate you then most heartily on the most successful work of another year, as well as on your most admirable Report each line of which is a delight to a man who loves Mysore and its glorious past." Another scholar writes:—

"Your Report is full of interest, and deals with several places I know fairly well. You are rendering a splendid service by unearthing these interesting monuments of the past, and many of us are grateful for the guidance we receive from your reports." Another writes :—"One does not need to be a scholar to find much matter of interest in this attractive and well-illustrated record of the activities of your Department." An Indian scholar writes :—"I have read your Report through with great delight. It is full of rich, varied and valuable information on all topics in which Indian scholars are bound to take a keen interest. The Sati memorials are most interesting. The manuscripts described are very attractive and I should like to have more of them." Another scholar writes :—"Whether you are unusually lucky or your State is exceptionally rich in archaeological treasures, you manage every year to make some important additions to our knowledge of history, while your graphic descriptions of temples and references to interesting customs invest the reports with the charm of a novel or a fairy tale." Another writes :—"The Report, as usual, is highly interesting and instructive and bears testimony to your unwearied application and profound scholarship. I am very glad indeed to learn that an Index to the Reports, so indispensable to rapid reference, has been taken in hand."

Two sites of ancient cities in the Bangalore District have been noticed in paras 13 and 19. Instances of the conversion of a Hindu temple into a Muhammadan shrine and of a Jaina basti into a Hindu temple are given in paras 15 and 36. A number of māstikals with some features which seem to be peculiar to parts of the Bangalore District has been noticed in paras 19, 21 and 23, and two of them illustrated (Plate V). Two places which were centres of literary activity in the 16th and 18th centuries are mentioned in paras 14 and 26. The sculptures in the Dharmēśvara temple at Kōṇḍarhalli (para 22) illustrating some episodes of the Mahābhārata and the tradition connecting the Pāṇḍavas with the locality are of some curious interest.

Among the illustrations of architecture and sculpture in the present Report, Plate I gives the north view of the Śāntiśvara-basti at Niṭṭūr, a Hoysala structure in a rather dilapidated condition, and Plate VI illustrates two Muhammadan buildings at Hoskōṭe. On Plate III are shown side by side two fine lamp-pillars, one found at Hoskōṭe and one at Harihar, and on Plate IV two elegantly carved pillars of the Agrahāra Ānjanēya temple at Hoskōṭe. Plates II, VII and VIII show some stone and metallic figures of archaeological or artistic interest found in the Bhavānīśankara and Viṭhalēśvara temples at Hoskōṭe and in the Narasimha and Varadarāja temples at Maddūr. Plate V exhibits two māstikals. Finally, Plate IX shows a portrait statuette of Subbarāya-dāsa and a painted wooden panel containing the portraits of the Mysore king Kṛṣṇa-Rāja-Oḍeyar III, his Divān Pūrnaiya, Subbarāya-dāsa and his elder brother Śinappa found in the Prasanna-Venkaṭaramaṇa temple at Mysore, and an inscribed metallic figure of Rāma found in the Prasanna-Kṛṣṇasvāmi temple at the same place.

As in previous Reports I have to invite the attention of Government to the urgent necessity for making proper arrangements for the preservation of all the artistic structures in the State, for the early introduction of the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act and for making a special allotment in the annual budget for the systematic conservation of these noble monuments.

The Keregōdi-Rangāpura plates of the Ganga king Rājamalla II (paras 63-68) are of some historical value as they corroborate the statements made in other grants of the early Ganga dynasty. They also form an important addition to the number of the authentic records of this dynasty brought to light year after year in my previous Reports. The fine stone inscription at Khāji-Hosahalli (Plate XII), which brings to notice a new chief of the name of Binayādityarasa (para 74) of about the 7th century, is of some historical interest.
